

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	3
Introduction	9
I. Utilitarian Criticism: Jeremy Bentham, James Mill, and the Westminster Review	11
A. Benthamism: Moral Newtonianism	11
B. Poetry and Push-Pin	15
C. Poetry and Truth	24
D. Westminster Review 1824-1826	33
E. No Ledger Keeping in Rhyme	36
F. The Moderate View: The Poetry of Thought	43
II. The Formulation of a Critical Theory: Wordsworth, Shelley, Tennyson, and Carlyle	51
A. The Early Criticism: The Westminster Review	53
B. The Mental Crisis	64
C. "What is Poetry?"	72
D. "The Two Kinds of Poetry"	79
E. Wordsworth: the Poet of Culture	83
F. Shelley: the Poet of Nature	86
G. The Critic as Logical Expounder	92
H. Browning's Pauline : a Piece of Flummery	101
J. Tennyson: the Advance of Intellectual Culture	106
K. Carlyle: The French Revolution	116

CONTENTS

III. The Strategy of Criticism	131
A. The Dark Night of the Mind	131
B. The Many-sidedness of Truth	138
C. Experience and Intuition	142
D. The Scientific Approach to Art	149
E. The Aesthetic Problem	152
F. Coleridge and Ruskin	155
G. The Two Voices	163
IV. The Utility of Literature	168
A. The Higher Utility	168
B. The Mass Society	172
C. The Utility of Art	179
D. Cultivation and Corrignibility	181
E. Real Life: Facts and Ideas in Literature	185
F. Real Life: History	189
G. The Utility of Literature: the Feelings	195
H. Imagination: Unexperienced Experience	205
J. Imagination: Idealization, a Precious Attribute	207
K. Idealization: the Hero	212
V. The Search for the Philosopher-Poet	220
A. The Road to Pragmatism	222
B. Mill and Plato	228
C. Literature in the University	231
D. Conclusion: Mill as Philosopher-Poet	236
Bibliography	242