

CONTENTS

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTORY

- I. Method of Inquiry—Chronological Limits—Unity of the Subject. PAGE
—II. Three Stages in Evolution of the Drama—Stage of Preparation and Formation—Closed by Marlowe—Stage of perfectly developed Type—Character of Shakspeare's Art—Jonson and Fletcher—Stage of Gradual Decline.—III. The Law of Artistic Evolution—Illustrations from Gothic Architecture, Greek Drama, Italian Painting.—IV. The Problem for Criticism—In Biography—In History—Shakspeare personifies English Genius in his Century—Criticism has to demonstrate this.—V. Chronology is scarcely helpful—Complexity of the Subject—Imperfection of our Drama as a Work of Art—Abundance of Materials for Studying all Three Stages—Unique Richness of our Dramatic Literature.—VI. Shakspeare's Relation to his Age—To his Predecessors—To his Successors—VII. Double Direction of English Literary Art—Jonson, Milton, Dryden, Pope—Spirit of the Elizabethan Epoch.—VIII. The Elizabethan Inspiration is exhausted in the Reign of Charles I.—Dramatists of the Restoration—Rise of the Novel—Place of Novelists in the Victorian Age . 1

CHAPTER II

THE NATION AND THE DRAMA

- I. The Function of a Great Drama—To be both National and Universal—How that of England fulfilled this—England and the Renaissance—Fifty Years of Mental Activity.—II. Transitional Character of that Age in England.—III. Youthfulness—Turbulence—Marked Personality.—IV. The Italians of the Renaissance—Cellini.—V. Distinguishing Characteristics of the English—Superior Moral Qualities—Travelling

	PAGE
—Rudeness of Society—The Medley of the Age.—VI. How the Drama represented Society—Determination of the Romantic Species—Its Specific Quality—Materials of Plays—Heywood's Boast.—VII. Imperfections of the Romantic Style.—VIII. Treatment of Character—Violent Changes—Types of Evil—Fantastic Horrors.—IX. Insanity.—X. Meditations upon Death.—XI. Sombre Philosophy of Life—Melancholy—Religious Feeling.—XII. Blending of Gay with Grave—Types of Female Character—Boy-Actors.—XIII. Comedy of Life and of Imagination—Shaksperian Comedy—Fletcher's Romantic Comedy and Comedy of Intrigue—Hybrids between Pastoral and Allegory—Farce—Comedy of Manners—Jonson.—XIV. Questions for Criticism.—XV. Three Main Points relating to English Drama.—XVI. National Public—England compared with Italy, France, Spain.—XVII. English Poetry—Mr. M. Arnold on Literatures of Genius and Intelligence—The Inheritors of Elizabethan Poetry.—XVIII. Unimpeded Freedom of Development—Absence of Academies—No Interference from Government—The Dramatic Art considered as a Trade and a Tradition.—XIX. Dramatic Clairvoyance—Insight into Human Nature—Insight into Dramatic Method.—XX. The Morality of the Elizabethan Drama.—XXI. Its Importance in Educating the People—In Stimulating Patriotism—Contrast with the Drama of the Restoration.—XXII. Improvement of the Language—Variety of Styles—Creation of Blank Verse.—XXIII. History of Opinion on the Drama—De Quincey's Panegyric	18

CHAPTER III

MIRACLE PLAYS

- I. Emergence of the Drama from the Mystery—Ecclesiastical Condemnation of Theatres and Players—Obscure Survival of Mimes from Pagan Times—Their Place in Medieval Society.—II. Hroswitha—Liturgical Drama.—III. Transition to the Mystery or Miracle Play—Ludi—Italian Sacre Rappresentazioni—Spanish Auto—French Mystère—English Miracle.—IV. Passage of the Miracle from the Clergy to the People—From Latin to the Vulgar Tongue—Gradual Emergence of Secular Drama.—V. Three English Cycles—Origin of the Chester Plays—Of the Coventry Plays—Differences between the Three Sets—Other Places famous for Sacred Plays.—VI. Methods of Representation—Pageant—Procession—Italian, French, and Spanish Peculiarities—The Guilds—Cost of the Show—Concourse of People—Stage Effects and Properties.—VII. Relation of the Miracle to Medieval Art—Materialistic Realism—Place in the Cathedral—Effect upon the Audience.

	PAGE
—VIII. Dramatic Elements in the Miracles—Tragedy—Pathos—Melodrama—Herod and the Devil.—IX. Realistic Comedy—Joseph—Noah's Wife—The Nativity—Pastoral Interludes.—X. Transcripts from Common Life—Satire—The Woman Taken in Adultery—Mixture of the Sacred and the Grotesque.—XI. The Art of the Miracles and the Art of Italian Sacri Monti	73

CHAPTER IV

MORAL PLAYS

I. Development of Minor Religious Plays from the Cyclical Miracle—Intermediate Forms between Miracle and Drama—Allegory and Personification.—II. Allegories in the Miracle—Detached from the Miracle—Medieval Contrasts, Dialogi, and Disputationes—Emergence of the Morality—Its essentially Transitional Character.—III. Stock Personages in Moral Plays—Devil and Vice—The Vice and the Clown.—IV. Stock Argument—Protestant and Catholic—'Mundus et Infans.'—V. The 'Castle of Perseverance'—'Lusty Juventus'—'Youth.'—VI. 'Hick Scorner'—A real Person introduced—'New Custom'—'Trial of Treasure'—'Like will to Like.'—VII. 'Everyman'—The Allegorical Importance of this Piece.—VIII. Moral Plays with an Attempt at Plot—'Marriage of Wit and Wisdom'—'Marriage of Wit and Science'—'The Four Elements'—'Microcosmus.'—IX. Advance in Dramatic Quality—'The Nice Wanton'—'The Disobedient Child.'—X. How Moral Plays were Acted—Passage from the old Play of 'Sir Thomas More.'—XI. Hybrids between Moral Plays and Drama—'King Johan'—Mixture of History and Allegory—The Vice in 'Appius and Virginia'—In 'Cambyses'	115
--	-----

CHAPTER V

THE RISE OF COMEDY

I. Specific Nature of the Interlude—John Heywood—The Farce of 'Johan the Husband'—'The Pardoner and the Friar.'—II. Heywood's Life and Character.—III. Analysis of 'The Four P's'—Chaucerian Qualities of Heywood's Talent.—IV. Nicholas Udall and 'Ralph Roister Doister'—Its Debt to Latin Comedy.—V. John Still—Was He the Author of 'Gammer Gurton's Needle'?—Farceical Character of this Piece—Diccon the Bedlam.—VI. Reasons for the Early Development of Comedy	148
---	-----

CHAPTER VI

THE RISE OF TRAGEDY

	PAGE
I. Classical Influence in England—The Revival of Learning—English Humanism—Ascham's 'Schoolmaster'—Italian Examples.—II. The Italian Drama—Paramount Authority of Seneca—Character of Seneca's Plays.—III. English Translations of Seneca—English Translations of Italian Plays.—IV. English Adaptations of the Latin Tragedy—Lord Brooke—Samuel Daniel—Translations from the French—Latin Tragedies—False Dramatic Theory.—V. 'Gorboduc'—Sir Philip Sidney's Eulogy of it—Lives of Sackville and Norton—General Character of this Tragedy—Its Argument—Distribution of Material—Chorus—Dumb Show—The Actors—Use of Blank Verse.—VI. 'The Misfortunes of Arthur'—Thomas Hughes and Francis Bacon—The Plot—Its Adaptation to the Græco-Roman Style of Tragedy—Part of Guenevora—The Ghost—Advance on 'Gorboduc' in Dramatic Force and Versification.—VII. Failure of this Pseudo-Classical Attempt—What it effected for English Tragedy	170

CHAPTER VII

TRIUMPH OF THE ROMANTIC DRAMA

I. Fifty-two Plays at Court—Analysis of their Subjects—The Court follows the Taste of the People—The 'Damon and Pithias' of Edwards—'Romeo and Juliet'—'Tancred' and 'Gismunda'—'Promos and Cassandra.'—II. Contemporary Criticisms of the Romantic Style—Gosson—Whetstone—Sidney.—III. Description of the English Popular Play—The Florentine Farsa—Destinies of this Form in England	197
--	-----

CHAPTER VIII

THEATRES, PLAYWRIGHTS, ACTORS, AND PLAYGOERS

I. Servants of the Nobility become Players—Statutes of Edward VI. and Mary—Statutes of Elizabeth—Licences.—II. Elizabeth's and Leicester's Patronage of the Stage—Royal Patent of 1574—Master of the Revels—Contest between the Corporation of London and the Privy Council.—III. The Prosecution of this Contest—Plays Forbidden within the City—Establishment of Theatres in the Suburbs—Hostility of the Clergy.—IV. Acting becomes a Profession—Theatres are Multiplied—Building of the Globe and Fortune—Internal
--

	PAGE
Arrangements of Playhouses—Interest of the Court in Encouragement of Acting Companies.—V. Public and Private Theatres—Entrance Prices—Habits of the Audience.—VI. Absence of Scenery—Simplicity of Stage—Wardrobe—Library of Theatres.—VII. Prices given for Plays—Henslowe—Benefit Nights—Collaboration and Manufacture of Plays.—VIII. Boy-Actors—Northbrooke on Plays at School—The Choristers of Chapel Royal, Windsor, Paul's—Popularity of the Boys at Blackfriars—Female Parts—The Education of Actors.—IX. Payment to various Classes of Actors—Sharers—Apprentices—Receipts from Court Performances—Service of Nobility—Strolling Companies—Comparative Dishonour of the Profession.—X. Taverns—Bad Company at Theatres—Gosson and Stubbes upon the Manners of Playgoers—Women of the Town—Cranley's 'Amanda.'—XI. 'The Young Gallant's Whirligig'—Jonson's Fitzdottrel at the Play.—XII. Comparison of the London and the Attic Theatres	219

CHAPTER IX

MASQUES AT COURT

- I. Definition of the Masque—its Courtly Character—Its Partial Influence over the Regular Drama.—II. Its Italian Origin.—III. Masques at Rome in 1474—At Ferrara in 1502—Morris Dances—At Urbino in 1513—Triumphal Cars.—IV. Florentine Trionfi—Machinery and Engines—The Marriage Festivals of Florence in 1565—Play and Masques of Cupid and Psyche—The Masque of Dreams—Marriage Festival of Bianca Capello in 1579.—V. Reception of Henri III. at Venice in 1574—His Passage from Murano to San Niccolò on Lido.—VI. The Masque transported to England—At the Court of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth—Development in the Reign of James I.—Specific Character of the English Masque—The Share of Poetry in its Success.—VII. Ben Jonson and Inigo Jones—Italian and English Artists—The Cost of Masques—VIII. Prose Descriptions of Masques—Jonson's Libretti—His Quarrels with Jones—Architect versus Poet.—IX. Royal Performers—Professionals in the Anti-Masque.—X. Variety of Jonson's Masques—Their Names—Their Subjects—Their Lyric Poetry.—XI. Feeling for Pastoral Beauty—Pan's Anniversary.—XII. The Masque of Beauty—Prince Henry's Barriers—Masque of Oberon.—XIII. Royal and Noble Actors—Lady Arabella Stuart—Prince Henry—Duke Charles—The Earl and Countess of Essex—Tragic Irony and Pathos of the Masques at Court.—XIV. Effect of Masques upon the Drama—Use of them by Shakspeare and Fletcher—By Marston and Tourneur—Their great Popularity—Milton's Partiality for Masques—The 'Arcades' and 'Comus' 253

CHAPTER X

ENGLISH HISTORY

PAGE

- 1 The Chronicle Play is a peculiarly English Form—Its Difference from other Historical Dramas—Supplies the Place of the Epic—Treatment of National Annals by the Playwrights.—II. Shakspeare's Chronicles—Four Groups of non-Shaksperian Plays on English History.—III. Legendary Subjects—'Loocrine'—'The History of King Leir.'—IV. Shakspeare's Doubtful Plays—Principles of Criticism—'The Birth of Merlin.'—V. Chronicle-Plays Proper—'Troublesome Reign of King John'—'True Tragedy of Richard III.'—'Famous Victories of Henry V.'—'Contention of the Two Famous Houses.'—VI. 'Edward III.'—The Problem of its Authorship—Based on a Novella and on History—The Superior Development of Situations—VII. Marlowe's 'Edward II.'—Peele's 'Edward I.'—Heywood's 'Edward IV.'—Rowley's Play on Henry VIII.—VIII. The Ground covered by the Chronicle Plays—Their Utility—Heywood's 'Apology' quoted.—IX. Biographies of Political Persons and Popular Heroes—'Sir Thomas More'—'Lord Cromwell'—'Sir John Oldcastle'—Schlegel's Opinion criticised—'Sir Thomas Wyatt'—Ford's 'Perkin Warbeck'—Last Plays of this Species.—X. English Adventurers—'Fair Maid of the West'—'The Shirley Brothers'—'Sir Thomas Stukeley'—His Life—Dramatised in 'The Famous History' &c.—'Battle of Alcazar.'—XI. Apocryphal Heroes—'Fair Em'—'Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green'—Two Plays on the Robin Hood Legend—English Partiality for Outlaws—Life in Sherwood—'George a Greene'—Jonson's 'Sad Shepherd'—Popularity in England of Princes who have shared the People's Sports and Pastimes

289

CHAPTER XI

DOMESTIC TRAGEDY

- I. Induction to 'A Warning for Fair Women'—Peculiar Qualities of the Domestic Tragedy—Its Realism—Its Early Popularity—List of Plays of this Description—Their Sources.—II. Five Plays selected for Examination—Questions of disputed Authorship—Shakspeare's suggested part in Three of these—The different Aspects of Realism in them.—III. 'A Warning for Fair Women'—The Story—Use of Dumb Show—Bye-Scenes—Handling of the Prose-Tale—Critique of the Style and Character—Drawing of this Play—Its deliberate Moral Intention.—IV. 'A Yorkshire Tragedy'—The Crime of Walter Calverley—His Character in the Drama—Demoniacal

	PAGE
Possession.—V. 'Arden of Feversham'—Difficulty of dealing with it—Its Unmitigated Horror—Fidelity to Holinshed's Chronicle—Intense Nature of its Imaginative Realism—Character of Arden—Character of Mosbie—A Gallery of Scoundrels—Two Types of Murderers—Michael's Terror—Alice Arden—Her Relation to some Women of Shakspeare—Development of her Murderous Intention—Quarrel with Mosbie—The Crescendo of her Passion—Redeeming Points in her Character—Incidents and Episodes.—VI. 'A Woman Killed with Kindness'—The Gentleness of this Tragedy—The Plot—Italian Underplot adapted to English Life—Character of Mr. Frankford—The Scene in the Bedchamber—Character of Mrs. Frankford—Wendoll—Question regarding the Moral Tone of the Last Act—Religious Sentiment—VII. 'Witch of Edmonton'—Its Joint-Authorship—The Story—Female Parts—Two Plays patched together—Mother Sawyer—The Realistic Picture of an English Witch—Humane Treatment of Witchcraft in this Play	327

CHAPTER XII

TRAGEDY OF BLOOD

I. The Tough Fibres of a London Audience—Craving for Strong Sensation—Specific Note of English Melodrama—Its Lyrical and Pathetic Relief.—II. Thomas Kyd—'Hieronymo' and 'The Spanish Tragedy'—Analysis of the Story—Stock Ingredients of a Tragedy of Blood—The Ghost—The Villain—The Romantic Lovers—Suicide, Murder, Insanity.—III. 'Soliman and Perseda'—The Induction to this Play—'The Tragedy of Hoffmann.'—IV. Marlowe's Use of this Form—'The Jew of Malta'—'Titus Andronicus'—'Lust's Dominion'—Points of Resemblance between 'Hamlet' and 'The Spanish Tragedy'—Use made by Marston, Webster, and Tourneur of the Species—V. The Additions to 'The Spanish Tragedy'—Did Jonson make them?—Quotation from the Scene of Hieronymo in the Garden	387
--	-----

CHAPTER XIII

JOHN LILY

I. The Publication of 'Euphuës'—Its Two Parts—Outline of the Story.—II. It forms a Series of Short Treatises—Love—Conduct—Education—A Book for Women.—III. Its Popularity—The Spread of Euphuism—What we Mean by that Word.—IV. Qualities of Medieval Taste—Allegory—
---	--

Symbolism—The Bestiaries—Qualities of Early Humanism—Scholastic Subtleties—Petrarchistic Diction—Bad Taste in Italy—Influence of Italian Literature—The Affectation of the Sixteenth Century—Definition of Euphuism—Illustrations.—V. Lyly becomes a Courtier—His Want of Success—The Simplicity of his Dramatic Prose—The Beauty of the Lyrics—The Novelty of his Court-Comedies.—VI. Eight Pieces ascribed to Lyly—Six Played before Elizabeth—The Allegories of their Classic Fables—'Endimion'—Its Critique.—VII. 'Midas'—Political Allusions—'Sapho and Phao'—'Elizabeth and Leicester'—Details of this Comedy.—VIII. 'Alexander and Campaspe'—Touch upon Greek Story—Diogenes—A Dialogue on Love—The Lyrics.—IX. 'Gallathea'—Its Relation to 'As you Like It'—'Love's Metamorphosis'—Its Relation to Jonson—'Mother Bombie'—'The Woman in the Moon.'—X. Lyly as a Master of his Age—Influence on Shakspeare—His Inventions	399
--	-----

CHAPTER XIV

GREENE, PEELE, NASH, AND LODGE

I. Playwrights in Possession of the Stage before Shakspeare—The Scholar-Poets—Jonson's Comparison of Shakspeare with his Peers—The Meaning of those Lines—Analysis of the Six Scholar-Poets.—II. Men of Fair Birth and Good Education—The Four Subjects of this Study.—III. The Romance of Robert Greene's Life—His Autobiographical Novels—His Miserable Death—The Criticism of his Character—His Associates.—IV. Greene's Quarrel with Shakspeare and the Playing Companies—His Vicissitudes as a Playwright—His Jealousy.—V. Greene's transient Popularity—Euphuistic Novels—Specimens of his Lyrics—Facility of Lyric Verse in England.—VI. Greene's Plays betray the Novelist—None survive from the Period before Marlowe—'James IV. of Scotland'—Its Induction—The Character of Ida—'Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay'—Florid Pedantry a Mark of Greene's Style.—VII. Peele—Campbell's Criticism—His Place among Contemporaries—'Edward I.'—'Battle of Alcazar'—'Old Wives' Tale'—Milton's 'Comus'—'The Arraignment of Paris'—'David and Bethsabe'—Non-Dramatic Pieces by Peele.—VIII. Thomas Nash—The Satirist—His Quarrel with Harvey—His Description of a Bohemian Poet's Difficulties—The Isle of Dogs—His Part in 'Dido, Queen of Carthage'—'Will Summer's Testament'—Nash's Songs.—IX. Thomas Lodge—His Life—His Miscellaneous Writings—'Wounds of Civil War.'—X. The Relative Value of these Four Authors	427
--	-----

CHAPTER XV

MARLOWE

PAGE

I. The Life of Marlowe—Catalogue of his Works.—II. The Father of English Dramatic Poetry—He Fixes the Romantic Type—Adopts the Popular Dramatic Form, the Blank Verse Metre of the Scholars—He Transfigures both Form and Metre—His Consciousness of his Vocation.—III. The History of Blank Verse in England—Italian Precedent—Marlowe's Predecessors—Modern and Classical Metrical Systems—Quantity and Accent—The Licentiate Iambic—Gascoigne's Critique—Marlowe's Innovations in Blank Verse—Pause—Emphasis—Rhetoric a Key to good Blank Verse—The Variety of Marlowe's Metre.—IV. His Transfiguration of Tragedy—The Immediate Effect of his Improvements—He marks an Epoch in the Drama.—V. Colossal Scale of Marlowe's Works—Dramatisation of Ideals—Defect of Humour—No Female Characters.—VI. Marlowe's Leading Motive—The Impossible Amour—The Love of the Impossible portrayed in the Guise—In Tamburlaine—In Faustus—In Mortimer—Impossible Beauty—What would Marlowe have made of 'Tannhäuser'?—Barabas—The Apotheosis of Avarice.—VII. The Poet and Dramatist inseparable in Marlowe—Character of Tamburlaine.—VIII. The German Faustiad—Its Northern Character—Psychological Analysis in 'Doctor Faustus'—The Teutonic Sceptic—Forbidden Knowledge and Power—Grim Justice—Faustus and Mephistophilis—Last Hour of Faustus—Autobiographical Elements in 'Doctor Faustus.'—IX. 'The Jew of Malta'—Shylock—Spanish Source of the Story—An Episode of Spanish Humour—Acting Qualities of Marlowe's Plays.—X. 'Edward II.'—Shakspeare and Marlowe in the Chronicle-Play—Variety of Characters—Dialogue—The Opening of this Play—Gaveston—Edward's Last Hours.—XI. 'The Massacre at Paris'—Its Unfinished or Mangled Text—Tragedy of 'Dido'—Hyperbolic Ornament—Romantic and Classic Art.—XII. Marlowe greater as a Poet than a Dramatist—His Reputation with Contemporaries 465

INDEX 537