

Contents

Introduction by Jon Elster	page xiii
Bibliographical Note	xxix
Chronology	xxxii
Foreword	i
Book I
I.1 Contradictory Judgments of the Revolution at Its Inception	ii
I.2 That the Fundamental and Final Purpose of the Revolution Was Not, as Some Have Thought, to Destroy Religious Authority and Weaken Political Authority	15
I.3 How the French Revolution Was a Political Revolution That Proceeded in the Manner of Religious Revolutions, and Why	19
I.4 How Almost All of Europe Had Exactly the Same Institutions, and How Those Institutions Were Crumbling Everywhere	22
I.5 What Was the Essential Achievement of the French Revolution?	26
Book II
II.1 Why Feudal Prerogatives Had Become More Odious to the People in France Than Anywhere Else	31

Contents

II.2	Why Administrative Centralization Is an Institution of the Ancien Régime and Not, As Some Say, the Work of the Revolution or Empire	39
II.3	How What Today Is Called Administrative Tutelage Is an Institution of the Ancien Régime	47
II.4	How Administrative Justice and the Immunity of Public Officials Were Institutions of the Ancien Régime	55
II.5	How Centralization Was Thus Able to Insinuate Itself among the Old Powers and Supplant Them Without Destroying Them	59
II.6	On Administrative Mores under the Ancien Régime	62
II.7	How France, of All the Countries of Europe, Was Already the One in Which the Capital Had Achieved the Greatest Preponderance over the Provinces and Most Fully Subsumed the Entire Country	71
II.8	That France Was the Country Where People Had Become Most Alike	76
II.9	How Men So Similar Were More Separate Than Ever, Divided into Small Groups Alien and Indifferent to One Another	80
II.10	How the Destruction of Political Liberty and the Separation of Classes Caused Nearly All the Maladies That Proved Fatal to the Ancien Régime	93
II.11	On the Kind of Liberty to Be Found under the Ancien Régime and Its Influence on the Revolution	102
II.12	How, Despite the Progress of Civilization, the Condition of the French Peasant Was Sometimes Worse in the Eighteenth Century Than It Had Been in the Thirteenth	112
Book III
III.1	How, Toward the Middle of the Eighteenth Century, Men of Letters Became the Country's Leading Politicians, and the Effects That Followed from This	127
III.2	How Irreligion Was Able to Become a General and Dominant Passion in Eighteenth-Century France, and How It Influenced the Character of the Revolution	136
III.3	How the French Wanted Reforms Before They Wanted Liberties	143

Contents

III.4	That the Reign of Louis XVI Was the Most Prosperous Era of the Old Monarchy, and How That Very Prosperity Hastened the Revolution	152
III.5	How Attempts to Relieve the People Stirred Them to Revolt	160
III.6	On Some Practices That Helped the Government Complete the People's Revolutionary Education	166
III.7	How a Great Administrative Revolution Preceded the Political Revolution, and on the Consequences It Had	170
III.8	How the Revolution Emerged Naturally from the Foregoing	179
	Appendix: On the Pays d'état , and in Particular Languedoc	187
	Notes	197
	Index	271