

Contents

Acknowledgements	page xvii
Introduction	xix
Chronology	xxxix
Editor's note	xliv
Bibliographical note	l
Glossary	lvii
The First New Science	i
Idea of the Work	4
BOOK I THE NECESSITY OF THE END AND THE DIFFICULTY OF THE MEANS OF DISCOVERING A NEW SCIENCE	7
I Reasons for our meditation on this work	9
II Meditation on a New Science	11
III The defect of such a Science if based upon the maxims of the Epicureans and Stoics or the practices advocated by Plato	12
IV This Science is meditated on the basis of the Roman jurisconsults' idea of the natural law of the gentes	13
V The defect of such a Science if based upon the systems of Grotius, Selden or Pufendorf	14
VI Reasons why this Science has hitherto been lacking among the philosophers and philologists	18

VII	The necessity, both human and doctrinal, that the origins of this Science be derived from sacred history	20
VIII	The difficulty of discovering the progress or continuity [proper to this Science]	21
IX	[The difficulty of discovering the origins of humanity] from the philosophers	22
X	[The difficulty of discovering the origins of humanity] from the philologists	25
XI	The necessity to seek the principles of the nature of nations by means of a metaphysics raised to contemplate a certain common mind of all the peoples	30
XII	On the idea of a jurisprudence of mankind	31
XIII	The severe difficulties of discovering [the mode of men's first ideas]	32
BOOK II THE PRINCIPLES OF THIS SCIENCE CONCERNING IDEAS
[Introduction]		37
I	The first principle of the nations is Providence	38
II	The rule of the world of nations is vulgar wisdom	39
III	The artificer of the world of nations is human will regulated by vulgar wisdom	39
IV	The natural order of human ideas of an eternal justice	40
V	The natural order of human ideas of a universal justice	44
VI	The natural order of gentile human ideas of divinity through which, depending upon whether they have been kept distinct or communicated, the nations are isolated or in communication with one another	45
VII	The natural order of ideas concerning the law of the nations [as it proceeds] through their own religions, laws, languages, marriages, names, arms and governments	48

Corollary	A practical test comparing [the results of] our reasoned principles with the vulgar tradition that the Law of the Twelve Tables came from Athens	57
VIII	The idea of an ideal eternal history in accordance with which the histories of all nations proceed through time with certain origins and certain continuity	66
IX	The idea of a new critical art	67
X	First: through certain kinds of evidence synchronous with the times in which the gentile nations were born	68
XI	Second: through certain kinds of medals belonging to the first peoples, with which the Universal Flood is demonstrated	69
XII	Third: through physical demonstrations which prove that the first origin of profane history lay in the giants and that profane history is continuous with sacred history	71
XIII	Fourth: by interpreting the fables in the light of physics, it is discovered that the principle of idolatry and divination common to the Latins, Greeks and Egyptians was born at a certain determinate time after the Flood, and that idolatry and divination were born at an earlier time and of a different principle in the East	73
XIV	Fifth: with metaphysical proofs through which it is discovered that the whole theology of the gentiles owes its origins to poetry	75
XV	Through a metaphysics of mankind the great principle of the division of the fields and the first outlines of kingdoms are discovered	76
XVI	The origin of nobility is discovered	79
XVII	The origin of heroism is discovered	81
XVIII	This New Science proceeds through a morality of mankind, from which the limits within which the customs of the nations proceed are discovered	82

XIX	This New Science proceeds through a politics of mankind, from which it is discovered that the first governments in the state of the families were divine	83
XX	The first fathers in the state of the families are discovered to have been monarchical kings	84
XXI	The first kingdoms in the state of the cities are discovered to have been heroic	85
XXII	The principle of heroic virtue	86
XXIII	The principles of all three forms of republic	87
XXIV	The principles of the first aristocratic republics	87
XXV	The discovery of the first families that include others than just their children	88
XXVI	Determination of the first occupations, usucaptions and mancipations	88
XXVII	The discovery of the first duels or the first private wars	89
XXVIII	The origin of the genealogies and the nobility of the first gentes	90
XXIX	The discovery of the first asylums and of the eternal origins of all states	91
XXX	The discovery of the first clientele and the first outlines of surrender in war	92
XXXI	The discovery of the fiefs of the heroic times	92
XXXII	The point at which the heroic republics were born from the clientele	93
XXXIII	The discovery of the first [forms of] peace and the first tributes in the two oldest agrarian laws, which are the respective sources of natural law and civil law and the joint source of sovereign ownership	94
XXXIV	The discovery of the heroic republics that were uniform among the Latins, Greeks and Asians, and of the different origins of the Roman assemblies	95
XXXV	The discovery of the heroic or aristocratic nature of the Roman kingdom	97

XXXVI	The discovery of the truth concerning the Law of the Twelve Tables as the basis of the greater part of the law, government and history of Rome	101
XXXVII	The eternal principle of human governments in the free republics and the monarchies	107
XXXVIII	The natural law of the gentes that proceeds in constant uniformity among the nations	107
XXXIX	The discovery of the divine nature of the first natural law of the gentes	108
XL	The principle of the external justice of war	108
XLI	Optimum law as the principle of revenge and the origin of heraldic law	109
XLII	The law of the bond as the origin of obligations and the first outlines of reprisals and slavery	110
XLIII	The religious aspect of the first laws of the nations	111
XLIV	The discovery that heroic law was the second natural law of the gentes	111
XLV	The discovery that ancient Roman law was wholly heroic and the source of Roman virtue and greatness	112
XLVI	The discovery that human law is the final law of the gentes	116
XLVII	A demonstration of the truth of the Christian religion and a criticism of the three systems of Grotius, Selden and Pufendorf	117
XLVIII	The idea of a jurisprudence of mankind that changes through certain sects of times	118
XLVIII [XLIX]	The jurisprudence of the sect of superstitious times	119
XLIX [L]	The discovery of the secrecy of the laws uniform in all the ancient nations	120
L [LI]	A demonstration that the laws were not born of deception	120

LI [LII] The jurisprudence of the sect of heroic times in which the origin of the legitimate acts of the Romans is discovered	121
LII [LIII] The origin of the harsh jurisprudence of the ancients	121
LIII [LIV] The discovery of the causes of the belief that the Law of the Twelve Tables came from Sparta	123
LIV [LV] The jurisprudence of the sect of human times and the principle of the benign jurisprudence of the last Romans	124
LV [LVI] The discovery of the causes of the belief that the Law of the Twelve Tables came from Athens	125
LVI [LVII] The discovery of the true elements of history	125
LVII [LVIII] New historical principles of astronomy	126
LVIII [LIX] The idea of a reasoned chronology of the obscure and fabulous times	127
LIX [LX] The discovery of new kinds of anachronism and of new principles for their correction	128
LX [LXI] New historical principles of geography	130
LXI [LXII] The discovery of the great principle of the propagation of the nations	134
LXII [LXIII] The discovery of the principle of the colonies and provinces and of Roman, Latin and Italic law	135
LXIII [LXIV] The discovery of the mode of the overseas heroic colonies	138
LXIV [LXV] The discovery of the first origin in this Science	141
LXV [LXVI] The origins of recondite wisdom are discovered to lie within those of vulgar wisdom	142
LXVI [LXVII] The idea of a civil history of inventions in the sciences, disciplines and arts	143
LXVII [LXVIII] Determination of the eternal point of the perfect state of the nations	145

BOOK III THE PRINCIPLES OF THIS SCIENCE CONCERNING LANGUAGE	147
[Introduction]	149
I New principles of mythology and etymology	149
II New principles of poetry	151
III Determination of the birth of the first fable, the origin of idolatry and divination	151
IV The first principle of the divine poetry, i.e. the theology, of the gentiles	152
V The discovery of the principle of the poetic characters that constituted the vocabulary of the first [gentile] nations	153
VI The discovery of the true poetic allegories	155
VII The idea of a natural theogony	156
VIII [The idea of a reasoned chronology proceeding] from the fables of the gods through those of the heroes to the things of certain history, which were necessary as the perpetual causes that influence effects in the known gentile world	156
IX Seven principles of the obscurity of the fables. Principle I: Concerning poetic monsters	158
X Principle II: Concerning metamorphoses	158
XI Principle III: Concerning confusion in the fables	159
XII Principle IV: Concerning changes in the fables	159
XIII Principle V: Concerning the impropriety of the fables that derives from [new] ideas	160
XIV Principle VI: Concerning the impropriety of the fables that derives from [new] words	161
XV Important discoveries concerning the law of war and peace resulting from the foregoing principle of poetry	164
XV [XVI] Principle VII: Concerning the obscurity of the fables: the secrecy of divination	168
XVI [XVII] The principle of the corruption of the fables	168

XVII [XVIII]	The discovery of three ages of heroic poets up to Homer	170
XVIII [XIX]	A demonstration of the truth of the Christian religion	172
XIX [XX]	How the first legislative wisdom was that of the poets	172
XX [XXI]	Of the divine wisdom and art of Homer	173
XXI [XXII]	How principles of recondite wisdom came to be discovered in the Homeric fables	175
XXII [XXIII]	The mode in which the first language among the nations was born divine	177
XXIII [XXIV]	The mode [of birth] of the first natural languages, i.e. those with natural signification	179
XXIV [XXV]	The mode in which the second language of the nations was born heroic	180
XXV [XXVI]	The mode in which the poetic language that has come down to us was formed	181
XXVI [XXVII]	Further principles of poetic reason	183
XXVII [XXVIII]	The discovery of the true origin of the heroic emblems	185
XXVIII [XXIX]	New principles of the science of blazonry	188
XXIX [XXX]	The new discovery of the origins of the family ensigns	189
XXX [XXXI]	Further origins of military ensigns	194
[XXXII]	The heroic origins of the distinguished Order of the Golden Fleece and the royal blazon of France	196
XXXI [XXXIII]	Further principles of the science of medals	197
XXXII [XXXIV]	The language of arms through which the principles of the natural law of the gentes of the Roman jurisconsults are explained	198
XXXIII [XXXV]	The necessity of the language of arms for understanding barbaric history	204

XXXIV [XXXVI] Concerning the third part of poetic language: words of settled meaning	206
XXXV [XXXVII] The discovery of the common origins of all the articulate languages	207
XXXVI [XXXVIII] The discovery of the true causes of the Latin language and, by analogy, of all the others	208
XXXVII [XXXIX] The discovery of the origins of song and verse	213
XXXVIII [XL] The idea of an etymologicon common to all native languages	216
XXXIX [XLI] The idea of an etymologicon of words of foreign origin	217
XL [XLII] The idea of a universal etymologicon for the science of the language of the natural law of the gentes	218
XLI [XLIII] The idea of a dictionary of mental words common to all nations	220
BOOK IV THE GROUND OF THE PROOFS THAT ESTABLISH THIS SCIENCE	225
BOOK V THE FINAL BOOK	231
[Introduction] The order of development of the subject matter through which a philosophy of humanity and a universal history of the nations are formed at one and the same time	233
[I] The uniformity of the course that humanity takes among the nations	234
[II] The origins of this Science found in two Egyptian antiquities	235
[III] The origins of this Science found within those of sacred history	236
[IV] Supplement on antediluvian history	237
[V] Compendium of the obscure history of the Assyrians, Phoenicians and Egyptians	238

Contents

---

[VI] The age of the gods of Greece in which the divine origins of all gentile human institutions are found	238
[VII] The uniformity of the age of the gods among the ancient gentile nations	254
[VIII] The age of the Greek heroes	255
[IX] The uniformity of the age of the heroes among the ancient nations	262
[X] The age of men	268
CONCLUSION OF THE WORK	271
INDEX	275
[I] Vulgar traditions	277
[II] General discoveries	287
Index	291