

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE	vii
LIST OF FIGURES	ix
CHAPTER ONE – INTRODUCTION	1
History of Research	3
Materials and Production Methods	7
CHAPTER TWO – CLOSED MODELS	9
Type 1: Rectilinear or Rounded, One-Storey Models	9
Type 2: Rectilinear or Cylindrical, Multi-Storeyed Models	15
Type 3: Rectilinear or Cylindrical Fortification Models	20
Type 4: Cylindrical Models Resembling Everyday Vessels	23
Summary and Conclusions	33
CHAPTER THREE – NOAS MODELS	37
Type 1: Small Naoi , Early Periods	37
Type 2: Large, Crude Naoi	40
Type 3: Large Delicate Naoi	42
Type 4: Naoi with a High Cornice and a Secondary Niche	48
Type 5: Small Naoi of Iron Age II	51
Summary and Conclusions	55
The Contribution of Archaeometric Analyses	58
APPENDIX 3.1: COMPOSITIONAL ANALYSIS BY NEUTRON ACTIVATION ANALYSIS (NAA) OF SIX IRON AGE CERAMIC ARCHITECTURAL MODELS
Matthew T. Boulanger and Michael D. Glascock	62
CHAPTER FOUR – OPEN MODELS	74
Type 1: Tall, Rectilinear or Cylindrical Models, with or without a Separate Bowl	74
Type 2: Tall, Rectilinear or Cylindrical Models with an Integral Upper Tray	82
Type 3: Cube-Shaped Models with or without an Upper Bowl or Tray	88
Type 4: Low, Elliptical-Rectangular Models	90
Summary and Conclusions	91
CHAPTER FIVE – RELIGIOUS AND ETHNOGRAPHIC ASPECTS	95
Official and Private Cultic Activities in the Land of Israel	95
Models in Official and Private Cult	97
Models as Ethnographic Identification Tags	98
Summary and Conclusions	103

CHAPTER SIX – MODELS AS ARCHITECTURAL METAPHORS	105
Architectural Elements of Buildings and Their Expression in the Models	105
Architectural Metaphors in the Model Groups	112
Summary and Conclusions	116
CHAPTER SEVEN – THE SIGNIFICANCE AND FUNCTION OF THE MODELS	119
Possible Interpretations of the Functions of Architectural Models	119
Summary and Conclusions	128
CHAPTER EIGHT – CONCLUSIONS	131
Comparisons between the Model Groups	131
The Artistic and Architectural Significance of the Models	133
The Models as Ethnic-Cultural Markers	135
The Contribution of Architectural Models from the Land of Israel to Our Understanding of the Development of Religion in the Iron Age	137
BIBLIOGRAPHY	140