

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
1 Introduction: Race and Postblack Literature	1
2 Postblack Aesthetics	21
2.1 Postblack Art, Black Culture, and Transdifference	28
2.2 The Post-Soul Generation	35
2.3 Scripts of Blackness and Thin Blackness	43
2.4 The Trope of Freedom	51
2.5 Cosmopolitan Ethics	58
2.6 Texts of the Postblack Aesthetics	66
3 Re-Forming Black Literature: Charles Johnson's Oxherding Tale and Short Fiction	77
3.1 "China"—Taking the Imaginative Leap into the Liberation of Perception	85
3.2 Freeing the Form in Oxherding Tale	91
3.3 "Put simply, your task is impossible": The Responsibility of an "Executive Decision"	107
4 Re-Writing the Text of Blackness: "Mimetic hacks" in Trey Ellis's Platitudes and Percival Everett's Erasure	125
4.1 Cultural Mulattoes and the Script of Authentic Blackness	130
4.2 Intertextual Love and the "common world" of Platitudes	138
4.3 No Love Lost for the "real thing" in Erasure	149

5	Political Narratives of (Thin) Blackness: Paul Beatty's The White Boy Shuffle and Charles Johnson's Dreamer	171
5.1	Thin Blackness and Postblackness	173
5.2	Fighting "the eternal war for civility": The White Boy Shuffle	178
5.3	"If we stop, we'll fall and be trampled": Dreamer and the Imperative to Keep Moving	200
6	Beyond the Invisible Walls of Blackness: Cosmopolitan Themes in Adam Mansbach's Angry Black White Boy and Paul Beatty's Slumberland	223
6.1	Cosmopolitan Conviviality	227
6.2	The White Race Traitor in Angry Black White Boy	234
6.3	Declaring Blackness Passé in Slumberland	249
7	Epilogue: Is Postblackness the End of African American Literature?	269
8	Works Cited	287