

Contents

List of illustrations	page ix
Notes on the contributors	xi
Acknowledgements	xiv
1 Introduction	I
Christine Alexander and Juliet McMaster
PART I: CHILDHOOD WRITINGS
2 Nineteenth-century juvenilia: a survey	II
Christine Alexander
3 Play and apprenticeship: the culture of family magazines	31
Christine Alexander
4 What Daisy knew: the epistemology of the child writer	51
Juliet McMaster
5 Defining and representing literary juvenilia	70
Christine Alexander
PART II: INDIVIDUAL AUTHORS
6 Jane Austen, that disconcerting 'child'	101
Margaret Anne Doody
7 Endless imitation: Austen's and Byron's juvenilia	122
Rachel M. Brownstein
8 Childhood writings of Elizabeth Barrett Browning: 'At four I first mounted Pegasus'	138
Beverly Taylor

9	Autobiography and juvenilia: the fractured self in Charlotte Brontë's early manuscripts Christine Alexander	154
10	The child is parent to the author: Branwell Brontë Victor A. Neufeldt	173
11	Choosing a model: George Eliot's 'prentice hand Juliet McMaster	188
12	Precocity and the economy of the evangelical self in John Ruskin's juvenilia David C. Hanson	200
13	Louisa May Alcott's juvenilia Daniel Shealy	222
14	Dr Arnold's granddaughter: Mary Augusta Ward Gillian E. Boughton	237
15	New Woman, 'New Boots': Amy Levy as child journalist Naomi Hetherington	254
16	An annotated bibliography of nineteenth-century juvenilia Lesley Peterson and Leslie Robertson	269
	Index	304