

Contents

List of Illustrations	VII
Notes on Contributors	VIII

What's So Funny about the Nineteenth Century?	1
Marie-Luise Kohlke and Christian Gutleben

PART 1

Humour and Metanarratives

- 1 Parody after Providence: Christianity, Secularism, and the Form of Neo-Victorian Fiction 47
Miriam Elizabeth Burstein
- 2 Neo-Victorian Killing Humour: Laughing at Death in the Opium Wars 71
Marie-Luise Kohlke
- 3 "Bleak Hilarity" in Alan Hollinghurst's The Line of Beauty 103
Dana Shiller
- 4 Drainage in a Time of Cholera: History and Humour in Matthew Kneale's Sweet Thames 125
Michael L. Ross

PART 2

Humour and Gender

- 5 Looking at Victorian Fashion: Not a Laughing Matter 147
Margaret D. Stetz
- 6 Neo-Victorian Feminist History and the Political Potential of Humour 170
Tara MacDonald

- 7 Good Vibrations: Hysteria, Female Orgasm, and Medical Humour in Neo-Victorianism 192
Monika Pietrzak-Franger and Eckart Voigts

- 8 “People keep giving me rings, but I think a small death ray might be more practical”: Women and Mad Science in Steampunk Comics 213
Dru Pagliassotti

PART 3

Humour and Postmodernism

- 9 “Now with Ultraviolent Zombie Mayhem!”: The Neo-Victorian Novel-as-Mashup and the Limits of Postmodern Irony 249
Megen de Bruin-Molé

- 10 Camp Heritage: Ken Russell’s The Lair of the White Worm as Neo-Victorian Spectacle 277
Christophe Van Eecke

- 11 Laughing (at) Freaks: “Bending the tune to her will” in Angela Carter’s Nights at the Circus and Rosie Garland’s *The Palace of Curiosities 296
Saverio Tomaiuolo

- 12 The Dog Days of Empire: Black Humour and the Bestial in J.G. Farrell’s *The Siege of Krishnapur 323
Ryan D. Fong

- Index 343