
CONTENTS

Chapter 1

SMALL GROUPS IN POLITICAL SCIENCE: PERSPECTIVES ON SIGNIFICANCE AND STUCKNESS

Robert T. Golembiewski and Gerald J. Miller

Introduction	1
Four Basic Small-Group Orientations: Tracing the Literature's Major Themes	2
Social Facilitation or Inhibition: Better or Worse Performance in Groups?	3
Social Attraction: How/Why Do I Love/Like You?	7
Social Comparison: You're OK—How Am I?	11
Social Control: How Are Individuals Tied into Broad Purposes?	15
Some Small-Group Dimensions: Toward Differentiating the Species	17
A Primer on What We Know about Central Properties: Components of a Small-Group Model	18
Five Particulars Disregarding What We Know: Some Garden-Variety Misunderstandings	22
Four Cases of Small Groups in Politics: Dynamics/Dimensions as Emergent/Contrived	26
Groups as Engines of Conformity: Groupthink on Kennedy's "Best and Brightest" Team	27

Groups as Supports for Deviant Voting Behavior: The Case of Republican Auto Workers	28
Groups and One-to-One Control: A Runaway Norm on Nixon's "Young Team"	31
Groups and the Development of Truth-Seeking Norms: One Deliberate MARTA Intervention	34
Overview of Significance and Stuckness: The Condition of Small-Group Analysis Today	37
Elaborating on Past, Present, and Future Significance: What the Small Group Can Do for Political Scientists	37
Understanding and Escaping Contemporary Stuckness: Whatever Happened to Small-Group Research?	53
References	64

Chapter 2

GOVERNMENT LEARNING: AN OVERVIEW

Lloyd S. Etheredge

Introduction	73
A Model for Theory Development: Medical Diagnosis Capability Overview and a Preliminary Caution	75
Defining Learning	76
Types of Individual Learning	79
Organizational Learning	82
Learning Agendas	84
Normative Issues	86
Trends	88
Motivation and Cognition—Individual Bases	90
Three Images of Individual Learning	90
Selected Additional Issues	109
Organizational Structure and Dynamics	119
"Smart" Organization Theory	119
Organizational Memory	121
Qualitative Differences of Public Bureaucracies	123
Intelligence Functions and Decision-Making Processes	124
The Washington Political Environment	128
The Structure of Time in Washington	128
Lobbying	129
Accountability and Review Systems: Legitimacy Trade-Offs	129
News Media Effects	130
Uniqueness and Self-Transforming Capacity	130
Societal, World, and Historical Contexts	133
Truth Theory	133

Secularization and Orthodoxy Theories	134
Government Learning: A Dependent Variable?	135
Problem Types	135
No Problem	136
Technology-Dependent Problems	136
Resource-Dependent Problems	136
Known-Answer Problems	137
Unproductively Conceptualized Problems	137
Problems Amenable to Full Scientific Method	138
Strong-Norm-System Problems	138
Pluralist, Low-Norm-Salience or Rapid-Change Problems	138
Forecasting with Uncertain Precedents	139
Problems Unanswerable or Unposable from Brain Constraints	139
Secrecy Penetration Problems	139
Different People and Different Cultures Problems	139
Time-Constraint Problems	140
Incoherent-Policy Problems	140
Diagnostic Repertoires	140
Overview	140
Illustrative Individual Diagnoses	140
Concluding Reflections	142
The Design of Institutional-Memory Capabilities	142
Increasing Effective Transitions and Competence of
Political Appointees	143
Quality of Watchdog and Critic Systems	143
Dependency Theory of Motivational Blockage	143
Good Judgment	144
Overload and How to Cope	144
The Critique of Ideology and Overconfidence	145
References	146

Chapter 3

POLITICAL VIOLENCE: A CRITICAL EVALUATION Sheldon G. Levy *

Introduction	163
Frequency of Conflict	164
Overview	164
Large-Scale Conflict	165
Assassination	174
Conflict in the United States	177
Comment on Periodicity and Randomness	180

Dimensions of Conflict	181
Selected Studies	181
A Typology Including Structural Violence	188
Hypotheses About Violence	191
Introduction	191
The Feierabend Group	192
Gurr	198
Other Studies	201
Summary	215
Overall Conclusions: Macroanalyses	215
Some Other Areas in the Study of Political Violence	217
Concluding Comment	220
References	220

Chapter 4

RATIONALITY AND COLLECTIVE-CHOICE THEORY

Robert Abrams

Introduction	225
Rationality	226
Individual and Collective Choice	227
Axiomatic-Choice Theory	229
Arrow's Social-Choice Theory	230
Arrow's Conditions	231
Arrow's Impossibility Theorem	236
Probability of the Voter's Paradox	237
Single-Peakedness and Value Restrictedness	240
Preference Priority	242
Cardinal Utility and the Independence Condition	242
Logrolling and Vote Trading	244
The Paradox of Vote Trading	247
Economic Theories of Politics—Spatial Models	249
Information and Rationality	251
Party Strategies	252
Game Theory	255
Games in Extensive, Normal, and Characteristic-Function Form	255
Two-Person Zero-Sum Games	257
Individual and Collective Rationality in Games	258
Solution Concepts	259
Mixed Strategies	259
Prisoner's Dilemma	261
N-Person Games	262
Rationality Conditions	262

Imputations	267
Domination	268
The Shapley Value	269
Nash Equilibrium	271
The Shapley Solution	274
Harsanyi's Risk-Dominance Relations	275
Collective Goods	278
Free Riders	278
Free Rider and Prisoner's Dilemma	280
Problems of Preference Revelation	280
Noncooperation without Prisoner's Dilemma	281
Altruism	282
Conclusion	282
References	283

Chapter 5

POLITICAL SYMBOLISM

Rozann Rothman

Introduction	285
Sources of the Research Focus	290
Philosophic Concepts of Symbolic Systems	291
Linguistic and Anthropological Approaches to Symbolism	298
Theories of Political Symbols	307
A Survey of Applications of Symbolic Theory	314
Law as a Symbol System	328
The Relation of Metaphor and Political Symbolism	330
Conclusion	334
References	338
 INDEX	341