

Contents

Citation Information	vii
Series pages	xi
Dedication and Acknowledgements	xv
1. Introduction	1
Theory, sport and society
2. Towards a sociology of sport	7
3. Thinking sociologically about sport	13
4. Studying sport through the lens of historical sociology and/or sociological history	21
5. The emergence of football spectating as a social problem	32
The meaning of sport, body and society
6. Human sciences, sports sciences and the need to study people 'in the round'	47
7. Welcome to the pleasure dome?: emotions, leisure and society	62
8. Body matters: theories of the body and the study of sportcultures	76
9. Development through sport and the sports–industrial complex: the case for human development in sports and exercise sciences	86
Case studies in sport and process sociology
10. The consumption of American football in British society: networks of inter-dependencies	99
11. The global media sports complex: key issues and concerns	114
12. Globalization, sport and national identities	127
13. Sport, identity politics, gender and globalization	143

Globalisation, sport and civilisational analysis

14. Power and global sport: zones of prestige, emulation and resistance	159
15. 'Civilised Games'?: Beijing 2008, power politics, and cultural struggles	176
16. 'Real politic' or 'ethically based': sport, globalization, migration and nation-state policies	189
17. Branding and consumption in the IOC's 'Celebrate Humanity' campaign	205
Index	219