

Benjamin and Adorno on Art and Art Criticism

Critique of Art

Thijs Lijster

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	7
Abbreviations	9
Introduction: Critique of Art	11
1. Autonomy and Critique	19
1.1 Introduction	19
1.2 The birth of autonomy	24
1.3 The artist in the marketplace	31
1.4 Art versus society	50
1.5 Conclusion	65
2. Ends of Art	71
2.1 Introduction	71
2.2 Annihilation of semblance: Baroque allegory	72
2.3 Allegory and commodity	81
2.4 Proliferation of the aesthetic: technological reproducibility	87
2.5 Adorno's dialectic of semblance	96
2.6 Culture industry: the social liquidation of art	98
2.7 Modernism: self-critique of semblance	107
2.8 Conclusion	119
Excursus I – The (N)everending Story	123
Hegel and the beginning of the end	124
Danto's post-historical pluralism	129
Vattimo's weak reality	136
Conclusion	142
3. Experience, History, and Art	147
3.1 Introduction	147
3.2 Benjamin's concept of experience	148
3.3 Experience and history	158
3.4 Art history and monadology	169
3.5 Adorno: experience and mimesis	177
3.6 Natural history	189

3.7	The tendency of the material and the crystallization of the monad	194
3.8	Conclusion	199
Excursus II – Base and Superstructure Reconsidered		207
	Struggling with a metaphor	208
	A farewell to Marx	214
	A parallax view on historical materialism	218
	Conclusion	225
4.	The Art of Critique	229
4.1	Introduction	229
4.2	Benjamin's reading of the early German Romantics	230
4.3	Revolutionary criticism	236
4.4	An exemplary piece of criticism: Benjamin's Goethe essay	250
4.5	Adorno's immanent criticism	259
4.6	The necessity, and impossibility, of criticism	267
4.7	Adorno's Mahler	277
4.8	Conclusion	286
Excursus III – Where is the Critic?		293
	Rise and fall of the critic	294
	Why criticism?	302
	The critic as intellectual	306
	Conclusion	311
Conclusion		313
	'A distance, however close'	313
	The 'actuality' of Benjamin and Adorno	318
	Critical models	322
	Post-Fordism and the new spirit of capitalism	328
	Becoming life versus resistance	333
Appendix – Notes on a Camp		339
Bibliography		351
Index		363