

---

Contents

1	Introducing dying . . . . .	1
1.1	Introduction . . . . .	1
1.2	Literature on dying . . . . .	5
1.3	Theoretical framework. . . . .	20
1.4	Coming to terms: Definitions . . . . .	25
1.5	Main arguments and structure of the chapters. . . . .	31
2	Fieldwork with dying persons . . . . .	35
2.1	Research context . . . . .	35
2.2	Research participants . . . . .	39
2.3	Methodology . . . . .	45
2.4	Research ethics and personal reflections . . . . .	54
2.5	Fieldwork in the native culture and contrast research . . . . .	63
2.6	Summary: Reflections on fieldwork with dying persons. . . . .	68
3	Becoming dying . . . . .	71
3.1	The beginning of the end. . . . .	71
3.2	How dying starts . . . . .	78
3.3	Dying as a vital conjuncture . . . . .	90
3.4	Summary: Becoming pre-exitally dying in Germany . . . . .	96
4	First experiences as a dying person . . . . .	99
4.1	Decision-making processes: Where and how to die . . . . .	99
4.2	Dying at home: An ambivalent ideal . . . . .	103
4.3	Decisions, requested and revised. . . . .	107
4.4	Institutions – gaining attractiveness. . . . .	111
4.5	Stressful movements . . . . .	116
4.6	Summary: Shaping the first time of dying. . . . .	121

5	Cultural models of dying . . . . .	123
5.1	Introducing cultural models. . . . .	123
5.2	Dying 'well': Approaching an ideal . . . . .	126
5.3	The umbrella model: Dying in dignity . . . . .	132
5.4	Cultural models of dying: Autonomy and serenity . . . . .	133
5.5	Summary: Cultural models of dying in Germany . . . . .	152
6	How it feels to be a dying person . . . . .	153
6.1	Feeling to be different from non-dying ones . . . . .	154
6.2	Feeling right: Display and concealment of emotions . . . . .	160
6.3	Fun and humor. . . . .	162
6.4	Envy and jealousy . . . . .	167
6.5	Simultaneity of emotions. . . . .	171
6.6	Summary: What dying feels like . . . . .	178
7	Changing perceptions in dying . . . . .	181
7.1	Changing sensory perceptions . . . . .	182
7.2	"...these drugs do me so much good": Medication and technical devices . . . . .	189
7.3	Changing perceptions of relevance . . . . .	193
7.4	Regrets, achievements, and the triumph of having no family . . . . .	197
7.5	Summary: Physical, evaluative and relevance-related perceptions . . . . .	200
8	Emic perspectives on the course of dying . . . . .	203
8.1	Figuring out reasons for dying . . . . .	203
8.2	Temporalities of dying. . . . .	208
8.3	Ending dying . . . . .	213
8.4	Cornelia's last hours . . . . .	219
8.5	Summary: Reflections on the course of dying. . . . .	221
9	Dying as liminality in the making . . . . .	223
9.1	Dying – a liminal situation? . . . . .	224
9.2	Lack and production of liminal guidance . . . . .	228
9.3	Emerging options for communitas . . . . .	235
9.4	Historical conditions of emerging liminality in dying. . . . .	241
9.5	Summary: Dying as liminality in the making . . . . .	243

---

10	Insights from and for dying . . . . .	245
10.1	Main findings . . . . .	245
10.2	Theoretical contributions . . . . .	250
10.3	Practical inspirations . . . . .	253
11	Epilogue . . . . .	257
	Reference list . . . . .	259