

Contents

Acknowledgements ix

Introduction 1

Race and ideology 11
American mixed-race cinema history 21
Interrogating terminology 25
Methodology and frameworks 30
Mixed-race spaces in French and American cinema 33
Franco-American narratives and Beur cinema 36
Summary of chapters 44

1 The Mixed Question 47

Language, representation and casting 47
The historical mulatta screen stereotype in America 57
The historical mulatta screen stereotype in France 60

2 Hollywood's 'Passing' Narratives 69

'Passing' representations as ideological construct 70
The dichotomies of post-war mixed-race women onscreen 75
Gender, 'passing' and love 80

3 The Limits of the Classic Hollywood 'Tragic Mulatta' 87

Imitation of Life (1934): Interrogating mixed identities 88
Casting and representation 93
Shadows and the interracial family 96
Imitation of Life (1959): Gender, difference and voiced rebellion 100
Performative identities: Sara Jane, Dandridge and Monroe 104

4 Cultural Shifts: New Waves in Racial Representation 109

Representing 'mixed-race France' 109

Reimagining the nation: Mixed families 112

Questioning mixed masculinity: Les Trois frères 118Melodrama, motherhood and masks: Métisse 121

Racial-sexual mythology and the interracial family 125

5 Transnational Families in Drôle de Félix 133

A search for identity on the road 133

Citizenship, violence and scopophilia 136

Trauma and redemption 141

Destabilizing the primary authority of the father 143

Reuniting transnational families 146

Conclusion 153

'Post-race' politics in America and France 159

Enduring stereotypes 163

Mixed-race sci-fi 165

Mixed representational potentials 168

Bibliography 171

Name Index 190

Subject Index 194