

Table of contents

Periphery, gender, language: An introduction Julie Abbou and Fabienne H. Baider	1
Part I. Undoing grammatical gender
Trying to change a gender-marked language: Classical vs. Modern Hebrew Malka Muchnik	25
Gender marking and the feminine imaginary in Arabic Mariem Guellouz	47
A poststructuralist approach to structural gender linguistics: Initial considerations Heiko Motschenbacher	65
A hermeneutical approach to gender linguistic materiality: Semiotic and structural categorisation of gender in Hong Kong Cantonese Julie Abbou and Angela Tse	89
Gender bias in Bantu languages: The case of Cilubà (L31) Francis Crequi Ngoyi Tshimanga	129
The representation of gender in Bajjika grammar and discourse Abhishek Kumar Kashyap	165
The lexical paradigm based on sex distinction and the semantics of its constituents in English and Belarusian Maryia Turchynskaya	195
Part II. Intersectional peripheries
When She and He become It: The use of grammatical gender in the Greek of the Armenians of Cyprus Chryso Hadjidemetriou	227
Lakota men's and women's speech: Gender, metapragmatic discourse, and language revitalization Jessica Fae Nelson	257

“Moldovan” and feminist language politics: Two distinct peripheral linguistic markets	285
Anna-Christine Weirich
Eastern boys and girls! Comparative linguistic anthropologies of lesbian and gay communities, Kuala Lumpur and Sorwool	323
Dimitrios Michael Hadzantonis
Harlots and whores but not lovers: Dressing down the pronoun for a female addressee in a Basque Old Testament	353
Begoña Echeverria
About the contributors	381
Language index	387
Name index	389
Subject index	395