

Contents

Introduction	xii
I. Before the Biennio Rosso: The Deeper Roots of the Socialist-Communist Conflict	1
The SPD, SFIO, and PSI in the generation before the war	1
Trends of the prewar socialist parties	6
Prewar socialism in Russia	9
The trauma of war	12
Lenin and the problem of war	17
War's end and the radicalization of western socialist parties	21
II. The Russian "Spark"	26
Revolution in Russia	27
The spread of revolution to Germany	34
The failures of revolutionary socialists in Germany	40
The Bern Conference	46
The First Congress of the Communist International	48
Leninism and the First Congress of the Comintern	51
The PSI and the Comintern	53
Comintern policy in 1919	63
III. Between Socialist and Communist Internationals	69
The response of the USPD and SFIO to bolshevik doctrine in early 1919	69
Impasse at Lucerne: The USPD in search of a new international	74
The reconstructionist movement	77
The Leipzig congress	80
November elections in France and Italy	88
The advance of the reconstructionist movement	91
The Strasbourg congress	96

IV.	Paths to Moscow	103
	The USPD opens negotiations: A letter from Moscow	104
	The SFIO approaches Moscow	109
	Cracks in the Maximalist majority	115
	Adjustments in Comintern policy: The extreme left	120
	Adjustments in Comintern policy: The centrists	136
V.	In The Land of Revolution	148
	The delegates of the SFIO	149
	The delegates of the USPD	154
	The delegates of the PSI	159
	En route to Petrograd	163
	Moscow	168
	Cachin and Frossard before the "most redoubtable of tribunals"	174
	Voyage down the Volga	180
	The late arrival of the USPD delegation	182
VI.	The Second Congress of the Communist International	187
	The opening days of the Second Congress	188
	Cachin and Frossard opt publicly for the Comintern	191
	The SFIO and USPD delegates before the Committee on Conditions	194
	New pressures from the bolsheviks	199
	Serrati versus the bolsheviks	201
	The compromise with Cachin and Frossard	205
	The attack of the extreme left	209
	The split in the USPD delegation	211
	Bordiga at the Second Congress	216
VII.	The Campaign for Communism	220
	Cachin and Frossard return to Paris	221
	The return of the USPD delegates	225
	The return of the Italian delegation	228
	Factory occupations and municipal elections	235
	The Twenty-one Conditions in France	238
	The new factions of the PSI	241
	Serrati and centrism	245
VIII.	The Split in Western Socialism	249
	The Halle congress	250
	Negotiations at Halle	254

The factions of the SFIO	257
The congress of Tours	260
The congress of Leghorn	269
Paul Levi and the Comintern	274
Epilogue and Conclusions	287
Notes	303
Bibliography	329
Index	341