

Contents

Executive summary	1
Introduction	4
1 – New forms of employment in Europe – An overview	7
2 – Employee sharing	11
General characteristics	11
Strategic employee sharing	12
Ad-hoc employee sharing	21
Characteristics of employers and employees	24
Drivers and barriers	26
Implications for working conditions	26
Implications for the labour market	28
3 – Job sharing	31
General characteristics	31
Characteristics of employers and employees	35
Drivers and barriers	36
Implications for working conditions	37
Implications for the labour market	38
4 – Interim management	40
General characteristics	40
Characteristics of employers and employees	42
Drivers	43
Implications for working conditions	44
Implications for the labour market	45
5 – Casual work	46
General characteristics	46
Intermittent work	49
On-call work and zero-hours contracts	55
Characteristics of employers and employees	61
Drivers and barriers	64
Implications for working conditions	66
Implications for the labour market	70
6 – ICT-based mobile work	72
General characteristics	72
Characteristics of employers and employees	75
Drivers and barriers	76
Implications for working conditions	77
Implications for the labour market	80

7 – Voucher-based work	82
General characteristics	82
Modes of operation in different countries	83
Characteristics of clients and workers	94
Drivers and barriers	97
Implications for working conditions	98
Implications for the labour market	101
8 – Portfolio work	103
General characteristics	103
Characteristics of clients and workers	104
Drivers and barriers	105
Implications for working conditions	105
Implications for the labour market	106
9 – Crowd employment	107
General characteristics	107
Characteristics of clients and workers	112
Drivers and barriers	113
Implications for working conditions	115
Implications for the labour market	116
10 – Collaborative employment	118
General characteristics	118
Workers' characteristics	124
Drivers and barriers	126
Implications for working conditions	126
Implications for the labour market	127
11 – Policy discussion on new forms of employment	129
General considerations	129
Employee sharing	129
Job sharing	131
Casual work	131
ICT-based mobile work	132
Voucher-based work	133
Crowd employment	133
Coworking	134
12 – Conclusions and policy pointers	135
Main characteristics of new employment forms	135
Impact on working conditions and the labour market	138
Policy pointers	142
Bibliography	146
Annex: Overview of national contributions	159