

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements		ix
	Introduction	1
	Evgeny Dobrenko and Natalia Jonsson-Skradol
Part 1. INSTITUTIONS
Chapter One	How Socialist Realism Was Exported to Eastern European Countries and How They Got Rid of It Hans Günther	17
Chapter Two	Literary Monopolists and the Forging of the Post–World War II People’s Republic of Letters Rossen Djagalov	25
Chapter Three	Once Dr Faul Has Left: The Agony of Socialist Realism in Poland, 1955–56 Evgeny Dobrenko	39
Chapter Four	From Literature Censored by Poets to Literature Censored by the Party: Censorship in the Czech Literary Culture of 1945–55 Pavel Janáček	61
Chapter Five	The Demise of ‘Socialist Realism for Export’ in 1947: VOKS Receives John Steinbeck and Robert Capa Vladislav M. Žubok	71
Chapter Six	The Soviet Factor and the Institutionalization of Bulgarian Literature after World War II Tatiana V. Volokitina	89
Chapter Seven	Cultural Renewal in Eastern Germany – Mission Impossible for Soviet Cultural Officers and German Anti-Fascists? Anne Hartmann	101

Part 2. DYNAMICS

Chapter Eight	Socialist Writers and Intellectuals in a Divided Nation: The Early GDR Experience Helen Fehervary	117
Chapter Nine	Stalinism's Imperial Figure: Hero or Clerk of the Pax Sovietica? Benjamin Robinson	129
Chapter Ten	From Avant-Garde to Socialist Realism: Continuities and Discontinuities in Hungarian and Romanian Literature Imre József Balázs	147
Chapter Eleven	The Short Life of Socialist Realism in Croatian Literature, 1945–55 Ivana Peruško	165
Chapter Twelve	Literature in Socialist Yugoslavia: Constructing Collective Memory, Institutionalizing the Cultural Field David Norris	183
Chapter Thirteen	'Yesterday and Tomorrow': The Forms of the Slovak Literature of Socialist Realism, 1945–56 René Bílik	199
Chapter Fourteen	Socialist or Realist: The Poetics of Politics in Sovietized Hungary Melinda Kalmár	217

Part 3. DISCOURSES

Chapter Fifteen	Introducing Socialist Realism in Hungary, 1945–51: How Politics Made Aesthetics Tamás Scheibner	237
Chapter Sixteen	When Writers Turn against Themselves: The Soviet Model and the Bulgarian Experience, 1946–56 Plamen Doinov	261
Chapter Seventeen	Big Brother's Gravity: East European Literature in the Mirror of Soviet 'Thick Journals' in the Late 1940s Evgeny Ponomarev	281
Chapter Eighteen	The Coming One: Prolegomena to the Positive Hero of Czech Socialist Realism as a Transforming and 'Transformed Subject' Vít Schmarc	297

Chapter Nineteen	Will Freedom Sing as Beautifully as Captives Sang about It? Reshaping the Croatian Canon, 1945–55 Nenad Ivić	319
Chapter Twenty	The Salon in the Camp: Friendship Societies and the Literary Public Sphere in the SBZ and Early GDR Natalia Jonsson-Skradol	327
	Conclusion Egenny Dobrenko and Natalia Jonsson-Skradol	343
	List of Contributors	349
	Index	355