

Contents

Foreword	5
Acknowledgements	7
1 Introduction	23
1.1 The point of departure	23
1.2 The suspicion of literary openness	26
1.2.1 Revelation as “the open work” in other authors’ views	28
1.3 The literary transmission of meaning	28
1.3.1 Author, text, context, reader	28
1.3.1.1 Meaning and significances?	32
1.3.2 Our accepted interpretative approach	33
1.3.3 The literary view of texts	35
1.3.4 Literary criticism in biblical studies	36
1.3.4.1 On the (potentially) negative side	38
1.4 Eco’s theory of the open work among other interpretative approaches	40
1.4.1 The basis: The transmission of meaning	40
1.4.2 Our selective use of Eco’s theory	45
1.5 General openness versus specific openness of literary texts	46
1.5.1 The poetic field of meaning in literary texts	46
1.5.2 Clarifying the wider terminology of ‘openness’	46
1.5.3 The result of deliberate opening: specific ambiguity	47
1.6 The nature of the open work	47
1.6.1 The nature of the open work as defined by Umberto Eco	47
1.6.1.1 Specific poetic language.....	48
1.6.1.2 The open network of interrelations.....	48
1.6.1.3 Eco’s definition	49
1.6.1.4 The role of intertextuality	50
1.6.2 Order versus disorder: The arrangement of the open work	51
1.6.2.1 Information and interpretative uncertainty.....	51
1.6.2.2 Information and order.....	51

1.7	Biblical examples of opening strategies	52
1.7.1	The newer literary view of metaphor	53
1.7.2	The recent literary view of parables	54
1.7.3	Series of literary units in 'open' mutual relationships	55
1.7.4	Specific dimensions of narrative language	55
1.8	Introduction proper	56
2	Genre Analysis	59
2.1	The purpose and legitimacy of a fresh discussion	59
2.2	Revelation as Apocalyptic	60
2.2.1	The former situation in the field	61
2.2.2	Some preliminary cautions	63
2.2.3	The SBL Genres Project and the paradigmatic definition	64
2.2.3.1	The Apocalypse Group and their paradigmatic approach	64
2.2.3.2	Important criticism	66
2.2.3.3	The resultant applicability of the master-paradigm.....	68
2.2.4	Important supplements to the paradigmatic definition	68
2.2.5	The Apocalypse among other apocalypses: The persistent difficulties	71
2.2.5.1	The term “ἀποκάλυψις” and the book’s prophetic aspect.....	71
2.2.5.1.1	Morton Smith on the occurrence of the terms “ἀποκάλυπτω” and “ἀποκάλυψις”	72
2.2.5.1.2	Fiorenza: Apokalypsis Iēsou Christou and prophecy in the Pauline context	75
2.2.5.2	The Apocalypse of John versus the paradigmatic definition	77
2.2.5.2.1	The old classic: Pseudonymity and pseudoprophecy.....	77
2.2.5.2.2	Other remarkable differences between Revelation and other apocalypses	81
2.2.5.2.3	Important similarities	85
2.2.5.2.4	John’s Apocalypse as a generic paradigm?	86
2.2.6	The limitations of genre classification: important methodological restrictions	87

2.2.7	A reader-oriented view of the Apocalypse's genre	89
2.2.7.1	Numerous literary forms and their unusual sequence in Revelation	89
2.2.7.2	Linton and the limitations of the genre definition....	92
2.2.7.2.1	The apocalyptic genre: a highly limited concept?	92
2.2.7.2.2	Revelation: A text difficult to classify?	93
2.2.7.2.3	The problem of selecting the texts and its implications	94
2.2.8	Conclusions	95
2.3	Revelation as prophecy	97
2.3.1	The biblical-prophetic roots of apocalypticism	97
2.3.2	Apocalyptic or/and classical-prophetic?	98
2.3.3	Fiorenza: Revelation and early Christian prophecy	100
2.3.4	The answer: Between prophetic and apocalyptic	102
2.4	Revelation as letter	104
2.4.1	The wider literary context	104
2.4.2	The presence of the letter form in the book	105
2.4.3	Imitation of Paul?	109
2.4.4	Conclusions	111
2.5	Three major genres and the implied field of communication	111
2.5.1	Contextual studies: John's referential power	111
2.5.2	The indicated extent of communication	112
2.6	The hidden Wisdom in Revelation	114
2.6.1	Tracing the Wisdom tradition in apocalyptic writings	114
2.6.1.1	An example: "He who has an ear..."	116
2.6.2	Adler and the apocalyptic esotericism	116
2.6.3	Aune and "The Reveal/Conceal Dialectic"	118
2.6.4	The revelatory experience of the reader and the arrangement of the text	118
2.6.5	Conclusions	119
2.7	The myth genre in Revelation	120
2.7.1	The Greek mythos and its specific communication	120
2.7.2	Prophetic roots, mythological components?	121
2.7.3	The language of apocalypses: An important shift in scholarly approach	121

2.7.4	The views of the resultant communication	123
2.7.5	The type of myth present in Revelation	125
2.7.6	The repetitive arrangement of mutually corresponding visions	127
2.8	Revelation as narrative	128
2.8.1	A dimension to be further explored	128
2.8.2	Repeated narratives in the Apocalypse	129
2.8.3	The narratives and the progression	130
2.8.4	Conclusions	131
2.9	Other influences: the literary context of John's writing	132
2.9.1	The NT pictures of the future: Revelation and parables	132
2.9.2	Ancient authors could write: Paratactic literature	133
2.9.3	Ancient audience could understand: Greek oratory	134
2.9.3.1	The rhetorical level of John's day.....	134
2.9.3.2	The major types of classical oratory.....	135
2.9.3.3	The structure of epideictic rhetoric.....	138
2.9.3.4	Conclusions.....	139
2.9.4	Liturgy and ritual	140
2.9.4.1	The liturgical dimension.....	140
2.9.4.2	The ritual liminality.....	143
2.9.4.3	Conclusions.....	145
2.9.5	Greek drama	145
2.9.5.1	A view largely abandoned	145
2.9.5.2	The points of contact.....	146
2.10	The major implications of the genre analysis	147
2.10.1	The complexity of genre in general: A mixtum compositum?	147
2.10.2	Specific generic complexity: Cumulative indications of literary openness	148
3	Other dimensions of literary openness in Revelation	151
3.1	The intertextual dimension	151
3.1.1	The types of John's use of the OT	151
3.1.2	The Nature and Extent of John's Intertextuality	153
3.1.2.1	The extent of John's allusions	153
3.1.2.2	The nature of John's allusions.....	155

3.1.2.3	Beale and the issue of intentionality	156
3.1.2.4	John's Specific OT Sources.....	158
3.1.2.5	John's OT source texts: Hebrew and Aramaic, or the LXX?	160
3.1.2.6	Fekkes on John's methods of interpretation	162
3.1.2.7	Mythological allusions	164
3.1.2.8	Conclusions	165
3.1.3	The function of John's OT allusions	165
3.1.3.1	The important progress of the recent decades	165
3.1.3.2	Is John's intertextual language primarily poetic?	166
3.1.3.3	The context: Allusive intertextuality in other relevant writings	167
3.1.3.3.1	Dimant on the use of the OT in Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha	168
3.1.3.3.2	Rusam on imitation of the OT in Luke.....	170
3.1.3.4	Moyise's approach: The dialogical intertextuality....	171
3.1.3.5	Moyise and the dialogical tension in Revelation: the evidence	172
3.1.3.6	Is the dialogical tension deliberate?	173
3.1.3.6.1	Dialogical intertextuality elsewhere: Hays and the echo in Paul.....	174
3.1.4	Summary and conclusions	175
3.1.4.1	An important dimension of the book's literary openness	175
3.1.4.2	An example of intertextual (and contextual) openness: The response of the enemies in Rev 11:13.....	176
3.1.4.3	The corollaries for reading summarised	178
3.2	The language dimension: OT allusions and the anomalies in John's Greek	179
3.2.1	The basic interconnection	188
3.2.2	Beale: Solecisms as John's Stylistic Use of the OT Language	188
3.2.3	Beale: Solecisms as Signals of Old Testament Allusions	189
3.2.4	The intentionality of solecisms and their link with the OT as discussed by other authors	191
3.2.5	Conclusions	193
3.2.5.1	The intentionality of John's grammatical anomalies: "Grammatical openness"?.....	193
3.2.5.2	John's "Figurative and Narrative Grammar"	194

3.3	The field of communication	195
3.3.1	The literary-functional field of Revelation	195
3.3.1.1	The oral context of the Apocalypse	199
3.3.1.2	The resultant communication	200
3.3.2	The social setting and function of Revelation	201
3.3.2.1	Written in a crisis: real or perceived?	202
3.3.2.1.1	A prominent example of the “real crisis” view: Fiorenza	202
3.3.2.1.2	Yarbro Collins and the “perceived crisis” view	203
3.3.2.1.3	Thompson and the official persecution under Domitian: An important change of view	204
3.3.2.2	Conclusion: The resultant balance	206
3.3.3	Fiorenza and two levels of communication in Revelation	206
3.3.3.1	Poetic ambiguity reduced to a rhetorical meaning?	206
3.3.3.2	Two ways of communication: Poetry and rhetoric only?	207
3.3.4	Who wrote that way?	208
3.3.4.1	Learned authors	208
3.3.5	Who read that way?	209
3.3.5.1	Two types of audience and setting: Is it legitimate?	210
3.3.5.2	Baukhham: elaborate referentiality indicates its readers	210
3.3.5.3	Early Christian prophets as learned and inspired interpreters	211
3.3.6	Conclusion: The openness of communication	213
3.4	Summary: Literary openness and its implications for literary arrangement	214
3.4.1	Literary openness indicated on each of the observed levels ...	214
3.4.2	Literary openness and the implied literary arrangement	215
3.4.2.1	Open texts, their structure, readers and interpretation	215
3.4.2.2	Closed texts, their rules, readers and interpretation	216
3.4.3	The structural signposts: What are we looking for?	217
3.4.4	What type of labyrinth are we going to go through?	218

4 The existing approaches to the macrostructure of the Apocalypse	221
4.1 Introduction	221
4.2 Intertextuality and the book's literary structure	222
4.2.1 The basic terminology	222
4.2.2 Intertextuality and microstructure	222
4.2.2.1 The most important examples	223
4.2.2.2 An extra-canonical pattern: The Combat Myth in Rev 12	226
4.2.2.3 Summary and conclusions	228
4.2.3 Intertextuality and macrostructure	228
4.2.3.1 The typical candidate: Ezekiel	229
4.2.3.2 Ezekiel summarised: A significant influence among other important ones	232
4.2.3.3 Another good candidate: Daniel	234
4.2.3.4 "The Daniel 2 marker"	234
4.2.3.5 Summary and conclusions	235
4.3 The chiasmic approach	235
4.3.1 The chiasmic awareness of John's day	235
4.3.2 Chiasmus on the macro-level?	236
4.3.3 An example of a small chiasm in Revelation	237
4.3.4 The large chiasm in Rev 17:1 – 22:5	238
4.3.5 The chiasmic proposals	238
4.3.5.1 The authors independent of Strand	239
4.3.5.2 Multiple patterns	239
4.3.5.2.1 An example: Rev 18	241
4.3.5.3 The authors dependent on Strand	242
4.3.6 The problem of multiple short parallels between larger sections	243
4.3.7 Redundant parallels?	244
4.3.8 The recurrent 'heavenly throne scenes': the rhythm of John's Revelation?	245
4.3.8.1 Noted by numerous authors	246
4.3.8.2 Looking for all of them: Seven distinct "scenes"	247
4.3.8.3 The "heavenly references" in Rev	249
4.3.8.4 The symmetrical links between the Heavenly scenes in Rev 4–22: A chart	249

4.3.9	The major Christological motifs in Revelation	251
4.3.9.1	John's Christology and the major narratives in Revelation	252
4.3.9.2	The indicated significance of the Christological motifs	253
4.3.10	The Motifs and the Scenes: their indicated structural functionality	254
4.4	Phrases as structural markers	254
4.4.1	Recurrent phrases in other apocalyptic writings	254
4.4.2	The role of specific phrases in Rev 2–3	256
4.4.3	Structuring or stylistic?	257
4.4.4	A confusing sample: the phrase “καὶ εἶδον”	258
4.4.4.1	Yarbro Collins: The unnumbered septenaries based on “καὶ εἶδον”	258
4.4.4.2	R. J. Korner and “καὶ εἶδον”	261
4.4.5	The exemplary case I: The phrase “ἐν πνεύματι”	261
4.4.5.1	The function of the phrase: The evidence	261
4.4.5.2	Summary	264
4.4.5.3	The distribution of the phrase: An overview	265
4.4.5.4	Recent criticism following from the “καὶ εἶδον” stereotype.....	266
4.4.6	The exemplary case II: Two pairs of longer angelic phrases in Rev 17–22	267
4.4.6.1	Rev 17:1–3 with 21:9–10 and Rev 19:9–10 with 22:6–9	267
4.4.6.2	An overview of the parallel wordings as presented by Thomas	268
4.4.6.2.1	The introductory formulas	268
4.4.6.2.2	The concluding formulas.....	269
4.4.6.3	The concurrence of structuring devices	270
4.4.6.4	The locations of the phrases: An overview.....	270
4.4.7	Other relevant phrases	271
4.4.7.1	“The Daniel 2 marker”	271
4.4.7.2	“Thunders, voices, lightnings, and an earthquake...”	273
4.4.7.3	“A great portent in heaven”	275
4.4.7.4	“And I saw a mighty angel proclaiming with a loud voice...”	277
4.4.7.5	“And I heard a loud voice in heaven, saying...”	280

4.4.7.6	“And I heard... a loud voice saying, ‘Write...’”	283
4.4.7.7	“The word of God and the testimony of Jesus”: A thematic marker?	285
4.4.8	The difficult proposed representatives	287
4.4.8.1	Rev 1:19 – a time-related structuring phrase?	287
4.4.8.2	Korner: “After these I saw”, “And I saw” (the “vision blocks” and the “individual visions”)	289
4.4.8.3	“Μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον” in Revelation	292
4.4.8.3.1	Between the regular and the variable	294
4.4.8.4	Korner: “The space/time referent”	294
4.4.8.4.1	The definition	294
4.4.8.4.2	The referent in several apocalyptic writings	294
4.4.8.4.3	Summary and conclusions	295
4.4.8.4.4	Rev 1:9–10 among other structure-related elements: An overview	296
4.4.9	The representatives of the phrasal approach	297
4.4.9.1	A prominent integrative example: Richard Bauckham (1993)	297
4.5	The septenary approach	299
4.5.1	A prominent representative: Adela Yarbro Collins	299
4.5.1.1	The foundations of this approach	300
4.5.1.2	Bornkamm and the “two great halves”	300
4.5.1.3	The Babylon and New Jerusalem “appendices”	301
4.5.1.4	Farrer and the “sabbath-visions”	302
4.5.1.5	The contributions	302
4.5.2	Other septenary authors in examples	302
4.6	Another prominent example: E. Schüssler-Fiorenza	303
4.6.1	The proposed pattern (1977, 1985) and its basis	303
4.6.2	The scrolls and the definition of major parts	304
4.6.3	The pattern of seven and other numerical patterns	305
4.6.4	The Babylon and New Jerusalem visions	305
4.6.5	The role of hymns	305
4.6.6	The joining strategy: “Intercalation”	306
4.6.7	The emphasis on joining in Revelation	306
4.6.8	The genre and the overall symmetry	307
4.6.9	The role of structuralism in Fiorenza’s approach	308
4.6.10	Summary	308

4.7	The linguistic approaches I: Structuralist	308
4.7.1	Introduction	308
4.7.2	The “universal categories” and their inevitable difficulties	310
4.7.3	Language as an autonomous system?	311
4.7.4	Methodological conclusions	311
4.7.5	A radical representative: Gager	312
4.7.6	An atypical representative: Ellul	313
4.7.6.1	The emphasis on interconnectedness and ‘movement’	314
4.7.6.2	Structuralist or literary?.....	314
4.7.6.3	Summary	314
4.8	The linguistic approaches II: Text-linguistic	315
4.9	The content-based approach	316
4.9.1	Briefly: Swete, Wolber, and Allo	316
4.9.2	Summary	317
4.10	The non-linear views of the book’s progression	317
4.11	The recent indications of an integrative approach	319
4.12	Transitionality as reflected in other approaches	321
4.12.1	The proposed views of John’s interconnecting strategy	322
4.12.1.1	Thompson: The stream of interconnected wholeness.....	322
4.12.1.2	Paulien: Duodirectionality	323
4.12.1.3	Fiorenza: Intercalation	325
4.12.1.3.1	Summary: Intercalations or transitions?	328
4.12.1.4	Yarbro Collins: Interlocking.....	329
4.12.1.4.1	Rev 1:9–3:22	329
4.12.1.4.2	Rev 8:3–5	329
4.12.1.4.3	Rev 15:2–4	330
4.12.1.4.4	Interlocks in wider context: Longenecker	330
4.12.1.5	Summary: Interlocking or more complex transitions?	331
4.12.1.6	Hongisto: multiple markers of (narrative) change, opposite dimensions	332
4.12.2	Summary and conclusions: Indications of transitionality	332
4.13	Summary and conclusions	333

5 The open structure of Revelation	335
5.1 The major dimensions of literary openness summarised	335
5.1.1 From the unique language up to the genre	335
5.1.2 The openness of relationships	337
5.1.3 The level of literary structure: The opposing qualities	337
5.1.4 The result: Composite transitions, open macro-relationships	338
5.2 Doing it all at once: John's "open" transitions	338
5.2.1 The Heavenly scenes	339
5.2.2 Clusters of structuring elements	340
5.2.2.1 Example 1: Transition VII in Rev 16: [15-] 17 – 17:3a without a Heavenly scene	341
5.2.2.2 Example 2: Transition II in Rev 3:21– 4:11 with a Heavenly scene (Rev 4) and a Christological motif (Rev 5)	342
5.2.2.3 Example 3: Transition III in Rev 7:9 – 8:6 – a simpler case with a Heavenly scene	343
5.2.3 The effect of John's transitions: Openness of macrostructural relationships	344
5.2.4 Intentional or haphazard?	345
5.2.5 The web of intratextual relationships: Examples	346
5.2.5.1 Numerous small parallels: Christological Motif I (Rev 1:10b-20) and the Seven Letters	346
5.2.5.2 Numerous small parallels: Revelation 2–3 and Revelation 19–22	346
5.2.5.3 Numerous small parallels: The Prologue and the Epilogue	347
5.2.5.4 Structural parallels: The series of the Seven Seals and Seven Trumpets	348
5.2.5.5 A macrostructural interrelation	349
5.2.5.6 Conclusion	349
5.3 Syntagmatic foregrounding on the level of literary structure?	349
5.3.1 The automatized text	350
5.3.2 Automatization versus foregrounding	350
5.3.3 Paradigmatic foregrounding	351
5.3.4 Syntagmatic foregrounding	351

5.3.5	The interaction between paradigmatic and syntagmatic foregrounding	352
5.3.6	The instances of syntagmatic foregrounding in Revelation	353
5.3.6.1	The sequence of literary forms and generic markers	353
5.3.6.2	Narrative elements repeated in unexpected context(s)	354
5.3.6.3	The missing narrative element.....	354
5.3.6.4	Other narrative subsections inserted: The Heavenly scenes	354
5.3.6.5	The structuring phenomena multiple, combined, and redundant: the recurrent phrases...	355
5.3.7	Other symptoms of deautomatization	356
5.3.8	Deautomatization, openness, and the role of form in Revelation	357
5.3.8.1	Modern concepts and an ancient apocalyptic work: “The How”	357
5.3.8.2	The defining limitations of literary openness and deautomatization	357
5.3.8.3	Form and content in the Apocalypse of John	360
5.4	John’s levels of transitions: the Christological motifs and the Heavenly scenes	360
5.4.1	Example I: Christological motif I and the first explicit septenary in Revelation	361
5.4.1.1	The basic interrelations.....	361
5.4.1.2	The resultant pattern	362
5.4.1.3	The functionality of Christological motif I	363
5.4.1.4	Conclusions.....	364
5.4.2	Example II: The combination of structuring devices in Rev 19–21	365
5.4.2.1	Transition VII (Rev 16: [15-] 17 – 17:3a) as a special case	368
5.4.3	The implied levels: The major stories and their subdivisions	370
5.4.3.1	Level one: The Christological motifs	370
5.4.3.1.1	The definition and nature of the Motifs.....	370
5.4.3.1.2	Their role in the book’s progression	371
5.4.3.1.3	The proposed major stories.....	371
5.4.3.2	Level two: The Heavenly (throne) scenes.....	372

5.4.3.2.1	The definition and nature of the Scenes	373
5.4.3.2.2	Their role in the book's progression	374
5.4.3.2.3	A methodological note	375
5.4.3.3	Two special agents: The interludes	375
5.4.4	Christological motifs and Heavenly scenes: An overview	376
5.5	A literary comparison: The structure of selected apocalypses	377
5.5.1	A simpler example: 3 Baruch	377
5.5.1.1	Open and closed apocalypses?.....	379
5.5.2	A more complex example: the canonical apocalypse of Daniel	379
5.5.2.1	Similar strategies of literary organization	379
5.5.2.2	The major strategies	380
5.5.2.3	Multiple genres	382
5.5.2.4	Methodological notes.....	382
5.5.2.5	Conclusions.....	382
5.6	John's Transitions summarised: The resultant arrangement	383
5.6.1	The nature of the proposed arrangement	383
5.6.2	A detailed overview of John's literary transitions	384
5.7	The primary corollaries for interpretation	393
5.7.1	Not a conventionally closed arrangement	393
5.7.2	What it reveals	393
5.7.3	What it conceals	393
5.7.4	The first implication: "The levels of reading"	394
5.7.5	The second implication: The necessity to reduce the field of possibilities	394
5.7.6	Interpretive contributions in examples	394
5.7.7	Examples of 'open' readings on the observed levels	395
6	Appendix. Integrating the 'Stories': A chart	397
7	Bibliography	403
	Abbreviations	429