

CONTENTS

|                                                               |           |            |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|------------|
| Preface                                                |           | v   |
| 1. Hours reduction, economics and the enterprise       | 1  |            |
| Choosing between income and leisure                           |           | 2          |
| Income, leisure and the fruits of productivity                |           | 9          |
| Macro-economic models and their limits                        |           | 16         |
| Assessment of capability                                      |           | 22         |
| 2. Arguments in favour of and against hours reduction  | 23 |            |
| Shorter hours as a contribution to health and quality of life |           | 24         |
| Shorter hours and unemployment                                |           | 27         |
| Opposition to reducing working hours                          |           | 29         |
| Adverse effects on labour costs                               |           | 30         |
| Effect on utilisation of facilities                           |           | 32         |
| Potential common ground between advocates and opponents       |           | 35         |
| 3. Productivity improvements                           | 37 |            |
| Distinctions among productivity improvements                  |           | 39         |
| Productivity and excessive hours                              |           | 40         |
| Motivation to improve efficiency                              |           | 46         |
| Time management and time utilisation                          |           | 48         |
| Automation and shorter hours                                  |           | 51         |
| Productivity and negotiated change                            |           | 54         |
| Contents                                               |           | vii |

4. Hours, wages and collective determination

55

|                                                                 |    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Problems of bargaining over hours                               | 55 |
| Covert wage adjustment processes                                | 59 |
| Insufficiency of wage and hours agreements                      | 60 |
| New forms of collective determination                           | 62 |
| Individual options about hours of work                          | 71 |
| Innovations in hours determination,and the problem of scale | 76 |

5. Assessing the potential for reductions in hours

79

|                                                      |    |
|------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Four types of hours reduction                        | 81 |
| (1) Reduction of excessive hours                     | 82 |
| Aims or benefits                                     | 82 |
| Implementation methods                               | 83 |
| Constraints                                          | 84 |
| Facilitating conditions                              | 85 |
| (2) Progressive reduction in hours                   | 86 |
| Aims or benefits                                     | 86 |
| Implementation methods                               | 87 |
| Constraints                                          | 87 |
| Facilitating conditions                              | 88 |
| (3) Accelerated reduction in hours                   | 90 |
| Aims and benefits                                    | 90 |
| Implementation methods                               | 90 |
| Constraints                                          | 91 |
| Facilitating conditions                              | 92 |
| (4) Reduction in hours throughindividual options | 93 |
| Aims or benefits                                     | 93 |
| Implementation paths                                 | 93 |
| Constraints                                          | 93 |
| Facilitating conditions                              | 94 |
| Concluding comments                                  | 94 |

References 99