

Contents

List of Figures and Tables	vii
Acknowledgements	viii
Notes on Contributors	ix

Introduction	1
Shafquat Towheed and Edmund G. C. King

Part I Reading and the Formation of the Literary Canon

- 1 'Khaki and Kisses': Reading the Romance Novel in the Great War
Jane Potter 29
- 2 Towards a Popular Canon: Education, Young Readers and Authorial Identity in Great Britain between the Wars
Alisa Miller 45

Part II Writers' Reading and Responses: Ford Madox Ford and Edith Wharton

- 3 Impressions of War: Ford Madox Ford, Reading and Parade's End
Max Saunders 63
- 4 Reading the Great War: An Examination of Edith Wharton's Reading and Responses, 1914–1918
Shafquat Towheed 78

Part III Reading and the Masses: America and Italy

- 5 'Please send me Tess of the Dr. Rbyvilles (Harding)': The Reading Preferences of American Soldiers during the First World War
Jonathan Arnold 99

- 6 'Today they read even those who did not read': Reading in Italy during the First World War 115
Sara Mori

Part IV Reading and National Identity: Australian Soldiers' Reading at the Front

- 7 William Albert Amiet, Barrister-at-Law, M.A., Reads His Way through the Great War 133
Jim Cleary
- 8 A Captive Audience? The Reading Lives of Australian Prisoners of War, 1914–1918 153
Edmund G. C. King

Part V Reading and Group Identity: War Artists and Conscientious Objectors

- 9 Reading Behind the Lines: War Artists, War Poets, Reading and Letter Writing, 1917–1919 171
Jonathan Black
- 10 Only a 'Scrap of Paper': The Prison Reading of British Conscientious Objectors, 1916–1919 190
Catherine Feely

Part VI Reading the News: Newspapers in Belgium, France and Germany

- 11 German Soldier Newspapers and Their Allied Counterparts 209
Robert L. Nelson
- 12 Forbidden Reading in Occupied Countries: Belgium and France, 1914–1918 227
Emmanuel Debruyne

Bibliography 242

Index 257