

Contents

Acknowledgements	XIII
Abbreviations	XV
Introduction	1
Chapter 1: Ways of Reading the Bible: can we relativize the historico-critical method and rediscover a biblical spirituality?	9
I. The historico-critical method	10
II. Biblical Exegesis in the Fathers	12
1. Reading texts at School: the Origins of the Commentary	13
2. The subject-matter of scripture – Christ	17
3. Doctrinal Reading of Scripture	18
III. A Model of Interpretation for Today	20
Section A: Christology – from critical scholarship to constructive theology	25
Chapter 2: Christological ideas in the Greek commentaries on the Epistle to the Hebrews	27
Chapter 3: A Cloud of Witnesses	41
I. The New Testament Witness	42
II. The Development of Patristic Christology	52
III. A Personal Testimony	61
IV. Conclusion	68
Chapter 4: Two Roots or a Tangled Mass?	73
I. Introduction	73
II. First Probings	74
III. Digging Deeper into the Past	79
IV. Some Possible Theories	84
V. Objections and Alternatives	88
VI. Fresh Probings	90
VII. Conclusion	102

Chapter 5: The Mark of the Nails	105
I. Tragic Vision	107
II. The Passion Narrative as Tragedy	112
III. The Resurrection in the Light of the Passion	113
Chapter 6: From Analysis to Overlay: A Sacramental Approach to Christology	117
I. The complementarity of analysis and imagination	117
II. Analysis and the Chalcedonian definition	119
III. Synthesis and imagination in Paul	122
IV. An overlay of texts and images	124
V. Synthesis and mysticism	126
VI. Sacramental interpenetration	129
Chapter 7: Wisdom in the Apostolic Fathers and the New Testament	131
I. The virtual absence of sophia	131
II. A wider sapiential vocabulary?	133
III. 1 Clement	134
IV. The Epistle of Barnabas	137
V. Wisdom in the Apostolic Fathers: conclusion	139
VI. Wisdom in Early Christianity	140
VII. Reassessing Wisdom in the New Testament	142
VIII. The Pauline Epistles	142
IX. Other New Testament Material	146
X. The Gospels	147
XI. Conclusion	149
Chapter 8: The Gospels and the Development of Doctrine	151
I. The Gospels in the Early Church	151
II. Doctrine and Gospel	155
III. Creeds and Gospels	158
IV. The Gospels and Doctrinal Exegesis	160
V. Doctrine, the Gospels and the Biographical Imperative	165
VI. Conclusion	168
Chapter 9: John and the Synoptics: an historical problem or a theological opportunity?	171
I. Modernity Pinpoints the Challenges	171
II. John and the Synoptics in the Fathers	172
1. One in Four	173
2. John's difference	174
3. Doctrinal Exegesis	178

III.	Can we Learn from the Fathers in the Postmodern Context?	179
Chapter 10:	Rereading Jesus through rereading the Gospels	183
I.	Second-Century Reading	184
II.	The Quest of the Historical Jesus and its implications for reading the Gospels	189
III.	Reading for Resonances	193
IV.	Rereading Jesus	203
V.	Appendix: Traces of Jesus in the Pauline Corpus	209
1.	Love	211
2.	Abba, Father	212
Section B:	New Testament Epistles and their interpretation	215
Chapter 11:	Notes on the Corinthian Correspondence	217
I.	Note 1. The Integrity of 1 Corinthians	217
II.	Note 2. The Christ-party	220
Chapter 12:	Note on 2 Corinthians 1:17b	221
I.	The present consensus	221
II.	Towards a more satisfactory interpretation	224
Chapter 13:	Paul's Case for the Defence	233
I.	Are the objections to the unity of this letter cogent?	234
1.	2 Corinthians 10–13	234
2.	Other suspected dislocations	236
II.	What is the genre of 2 Corinthians?	240
1.	Introduction or exordium (προοίμιον – prooimion)	242
2.	The narrative (διήγησις – diēgēsis)	242
3.	The proof(s) (πίστις – pistis)	242
4.	The peroration	243
III.	Can objections to this theory be met?	244
IV.	What was the situation which gave rise to this apology?	248
V.	What critical conclusions matter in order to understand the text?	256
VI.	Appendix: Thematic and verbal anticipations of 2 Corinthians in 1 Corinthians	257

Chapter 14: The Biblical Roots of Paul's Perceptions	259
I. The importance of the psalms	262
II. The importance of the prophets	266
III. The importance of the wisdom literature	273
IV. Paul and the Scriptures	275
Chapter 15: Understanding Romans in the Light of 2 Corinthians . . .	279
I. 2 Corinthians	279
II. Romans	283
Chapter 16: The Pastoral Epistles and the Ethics of Reading	291
Chapter 17: The Non-Pauline Letters	305
Section C: The Nature of Scripture	317
Chapter 18: Interpretative Genres and the Inevitability of Pluralism . .	319
Chapter 19: Augustine's Hermeneutics and Postmodern Criticism . . .	335
I. What is postmodern criticism?	335
II. The socio-cultural location of Augustine's Christian Instruction	338
1. Rhetorical theories of communication	339
2. Exegesis of literary texts	340
3. Content and style	344
III. Augustine and Postmodern Criticism: the reference of the text	346
Chapter 20: Books and their "aura": the functions of written texts in Judaism, Paganism and Christianity during the First Centuries CE	351
I. Ἑλληνισμός – Hellenismos	353
II. Ἰουδαϊσμός – Ioudaismos	356
III. Χριστιανισμός – Christianismos	359
Chapter 21: Did Luke think he was writing scripture?	367
Chapter 22: The "Mind" of Scripture: Theological Readings of the Bible in the Fathers	373
I. The sense behind the wording	373
II. A "more dogmatic" exegesis?	378
III. The Bible and theology: then and now	383
IV. Learning from the past – and improving on it?	385
V. Final words from Ephrem the Syrian	387

Chapter 23: The Trinity and the New Testament	389
I. The “emergence” of trinitarian theology	390
1. The Monarchian controversies	391
2. The Arian Controversy	398
II. New Testament Theology and the Trinity	400
1. New Testament theology – “myth,” “doctrine,” or what?	401
2. A clearer view?	402
Chapter 24: Sacred text and the transcendence of tradition: the Bible in a pluralist Society	407
I. Pluralist society	407
II. The nature of sacred texts	410
III. The Bible and its attitudes to the “other”	413
IV. The transcendence of tradition	417
 Section D: Concluding Hermeneutical Exercise	 421
Chapter 25: The Dynamics of Interpretation: Jesus and Scripture in Hebrews	423
I. Text and reader in Hebrews’ scriptural hermeneutics	424
II. Jesus and scripture	426
III. The formation of reading communities	428
IV. Learning to read scripture from Hebrews and its interpreters	434
V. Final Word	438
Bibliography	441
Primary Sources	441
Secondary Sources	446
Index of Biblical and other Ancient Sources including References	459
Index of Modern Authors	480
Index of Subjects	486