

Table of Contents

1.	Introduction	13
2.	Anthony Thwaite's Role in the Controversy about the Movement	17
3.	Thwaite 'Out-movementing' the Movement: The Fantasy Press Pamphlet and Home Truths	29
3.1	Empson's Presence in Thwaite's Early Poems	29
3.2	The Use of Myth: Graves and Muir as Mentors	33
3.3	Thwaite's Kinship to Other Undergraduate Poets at Oxford and Cambridge	36
3.4	The Last Part of Home Truths : Larkin Emerging as an Influence	39
4.	Thwaite's Larkinesque Phase: The Owl in The Tree	43
4.1	The Realistic Mode in Poetry: Metonymy over Metaphor, Things over Words	43
4.2	Larkin's "Mr Bleaney" and Thwaite's "Mr. Cooper": A Case-Study of the Realistic Mode in Movement Poetry	47
4.3	"What is beyond the well-trimmed hedge": Intimations of Death in The Owl in the Tree	56
5.	Larkin and Modernism	62
5.1	Larkin's Poetry: A Critical Revaluation	62
5.2	"The past is past and the future neuter": Larkin's Obsession with the Past	70
5.3	The Emergence of a Mythic, Cyclical View of Time in Larkin's Later Poems	87
6.	Thwaite's Break With the Limiting Movement Mould: The Stones Of Emptiness	99
6.1	The Presence of the Past in England: Thwaite Gradually Emerging from Larkin's Shadow	99

6.2	The Deserts of Hesperides: Thwaite's Libyan Experience	107
6.3	Modernism Revisited: "The Letters of Synesius"	119
6.4	The Critical Reception of The Stones of Emptiness	134
7.	Inscriptions	137
7.1	The Poet-Archaeologist in Search of the Elusive Past . . .	137
7.2	"A blunt tube, ravenous": The Hughesian Strain in Thwaite's Nature Poetry	150
7.3	Reviews of Inscriptions	156
8.	New Confessions	158
8.1	"To Carthage then I came": New Confessions as an Exploration of a Doppelgänger's Mind	158
8.2	New Confessions and Mercian Hymns : Thwaite's Historical Bishop of Hippo versus Geoffrey Hill's Mythic Genius of the West Midlands	179
8.3	"I prefer my Thwaite cutting his suburban grass with Larkin's old mower." The Critical Reception of New Confessions	186
9.	A Portion For Foxes	189
9.1	The Act of Poetic Creation as an Archeological Rescue Dig	189
9.2	Anthony Thwaite and Seamus Heaney: Two Contem- porary Poet-Archeologists	195
9.3	Heaney's Stance towards Modernism	201
9.4	Reverberations of the Movement in A Portion for Foxes	206
9.5	A New Departure: Experiments in Light Verse	216
9.6	"And where we were a hundred years ago / Tugs us as something lost, not to be found": The Poems Pointing Forward to Victorian Voices	219
10.	Victorian Voices	223
10.1	Definitions of the Dramatic Monologue: Thwaite's Use of the Genre and His Kinship to Browning	223

10.2	Browning's Use of Historical Sources	227
10.3	The Use of Source Material in Victorian Voices	228
10.4	The Element of the Dramatic 'Feint' in Browning and Thwaite	241
10.5	Women Presenting Their Case in Victorian Voices	242
10.6	The Question of Divine Providence	250
10.7	The Artistic and Political Also-Rans in Victorian Voices .	261
10.8	The Overall Design of Victorian Voices	265
10.9	The Position of Victorian Voices in the General Context of Contemporary British Poetry	269
11.	Poems 1953–1983	273
11.1	Thwaite's Most Recent work in Poems 1953–1983	273
11.2	"An underrated poet": The Critical Response to Poems 1953–1983	277
	Bibliography	281