

Contents

List of illustrations	page ix
Sources and acknowledgements	ix
Preface	xi
1 Virginia and the arguments for the South	1
Remembering the future: the Virginia pamphleteers	1
Dreams of exile: the first families of colonial Virginia	9
From revolution to reaction: Thomas Jefferson, John Taylor of Caroline, and John Randolph of Roanoke	18
2 Holding the line in the Old South	31
Versions of home: John Calhoun and the Constitutionalists	31
To speak of Arcadia: William Gilmore Simms and some plantation novelists	45
Chaining the rough beast: the Southwestern humorists	62
3 The New South, the lost cause, and the recovered dream	75
To vindicate the people: some versions of the Civil War	75
Looking before and after: writers in the New South	88
A Southern autobiography: Mark Twain	102
4 A climate of fear: the South between the wars and the Nashville Agrarians	122
To live at the centre: Southern writers and social crisis	122
Shouting across immense voids: approaches to the Agrarian argument	125
Speech and silence: I'll Take My Stand and the defence of the South	142
5 Out of the South: the fiction of William Faulkner	165

6	The Southerner as amphibian: the region since the war	217
	A house divided against itself: an approach to recent Southern culture and writing	217
	On the necessity of losing battles: Eudora Welty	237
	Notes for a novel about the end of the South: Walker Percy	251
	Postscript	271
	Notes	289
	Index	323