

Nicola Renger

Mapping and Historiography in Contemporary Canadian Literature in English

PETER LANG
Europäischer Verlag der Wissenschaften

Table of Contents

A. Introduction	13
1. Prologue	13
2. The Literary Context	14
2.1. Canada's Literary Corpus until 1960	14
2.2. Canadian Literature From the 1960s Onward	16
3. Developments in Geography and History	22
3.1. Geography and Mapping	23
3.1.1. Developments in the Discipline of Geography	23
3.1.2. Mapping Grounds	28
3.1.3. A Definition of Mapping	32
3.2. History and Historiography	35
3.2.1. Developments in the Discipline of History	35
3.2.2. Historiography: Narrator, Document, Narrative Structure	39
3.3. Connecting Geography and History	45
4. The Postcolonial and Feminist Contexts	47
4.1. Postcolonialism and Feminism versus Postmodernism	47
4.2. Definition of Postcolonialism and Feminism	48
4.2.1. Postcolonialism	49
4.2.2. Feminism	52
4.3. Postcolonialism and Feminism: Mapping	55
4.4. Postcolonialism and Feminism: Historiography	62
4.5. The Canadian Context	64
4.5.1. Canada's Postcolonial Complexities	64
4.5.2. Constructing a Canadian Identity	66
5. Staking the Ground	69
5.1. Studies on Mapping in Canadian Literature	69
5.2. Studies on Historiography in Canadian Literature	73
6. The Principal Texts	76
6.1. The Authors and their Oeuvres	76
6.1.1. John Steffler's The Afterlife of George Cartwright	76
6.1.2. Daphne Marlatt's Ana Historic	78
6.1.3. Michael Ondaatje's In the Skin of a Lion and The English Patient	79
6.2. The Choice of Texts	81
B. Mapping	85
I. A Postcolonial Revision of Colonial Mapping	85
1. Introduction	85
2. Appropriation of the Land	86

2.1. The Cartographic Gaze	87
2.2. Placing Names on the Map	90
3. The Science of Geography	95
3.1. Superiority of European Sciences	96
3.2. Objectivity in Scientific Mapping	99
3.3. Accuracy in Scientific Mapping	103
4. Land, Body, and Culture	107
4.1. Mapping the Land	108
4.1.1. Mapping the Indigenes	108
4.1.2. The Colonizer's Paradise and Home	113
4.2. Remapping the Land	118
5. Conclusion	120
II. A Feminist Remapping of a Woman's Lot and Body	124
1. Introduction	124
2. A Woman's Lot	128
2.1. Social Structures and Strictures	129
2.1.1. The Domestic Realm	129
2.1.2. Defining a "Woman's Lot"	132
2.2. Ina's Resistance: Going Off the Deep End	134
2.3. Annie's and Ana's Resistance	137
2.3.1. Into the Woods	138
2.3.2. Off the Beaten Track	141
3. The Female Body	146
3.1. The Hysterical Body	147
3.1.1. The Female Body as Other	148
3.1.2. Female Otherness as Hysteria	152
3.2. Redefining the Monstrous Female Body	158
3.2.1. In Search of the Monster	158
3.2.2. Rewriting and Remapping the Female Body	160
3.3. The Female Body as Resource	163
3.3.1. Trees and Women	163
3.3.2. Hysteria in the Context of the Settler Colony	170
3.4. An Extension Toward Geografictione and Allegory	174
3.4.1. A Geographic-Fictional Genre: Geografictione	175
3.4.2. A Geopolitical Allegory: The Giantess as Canada	177
4. Conclusion	185
III. A Human Remapping of Nation	191
1. Introduction	191
2. Spatial Control and Resistance in In the Skin of a Lion	193
2.1. Dehumanization and Abstract Space	193
2.1.1. The Body and Space of the Workforce	193
2.1.2. Mapping the City	197

2.2. Gaining Ground	199
2.2.1. Individual Resistance	200
2.2.2. "A Wave of Civilization"	203
2.3. A Canadian Map	206
3. Unreadable Territories in The English Patient	207
3.1. The Unreadable Body	207
3.1.1. Names and Nations	208
3.1.2. The Body Challenging Nationality	210
3.1.3. The Fluid, Fixed Body as Unreadable Map	212
3.2. Mapping the Desert	214
4. Conclusion	219

C. Historiography 225

I. In Dialogue With Colonial History 225

1. Introduction	225
2. A Colonial Stereotype	226
2.1. Central and Marginal Figures of Colonial History	226
2.2. A Representative of Colonial Ideology	232
2.2.1. Benefits of Colonialism	232
2.2.2. True Motivations	235
3. Dialogic Structures	237
3.1. Documentary Information	238
3.2. Symbolic Emphasis and Narrative Ellipsis	241
3.3. A Polyphonic Narrative	245
3.3.1. Citation	245
3.3.2. Fragmentation and Connection	247
3.3.3. The Voice of Conscience	249
4. George Cartwright's Fictional Afterlife	251
4.1. Chronopolitics and the Postcolonial Reversal	252
4.2. Countermovement to Colonial Travel	253
4.3. Supplementary Writing	255
5. Conclusion	258

II. Female Histories and Bodies 264

1. Introduction	264
2. Male Historiography and Female Absence	266
2.1. Written in Bold Print	266
2.2. The Significance and Erasure of Pioneer Women	268
3. Writing Fiction Against Absence	270
3.1. Writing Protagonists	270
3.2. The Ahistoric: Private Fictions	271
4. Monstrous Historiography	278

4.1. A Question of Genre	278
4.2. Quoting Gaps	280
4.3. Trails Through a Perverted Text	284
4.4. Typography	287
4.5. Polyphony	289
4.5.1. Who's Narrating?	289
4.5.2. Who's Reading?	294
5. The Female Body Written into History	295
5.1. Writing From the Gap	296
5.1.1. Bleeding and Hysteria	296
5.1.2. Giving Birth	298
5.2. The Performing Body	299
6. Conclusion	305
III. Communal Human Histories	311
1. Introduction	311
2. Names, Language and Story-Telling	312
2.1. Names	312
2.2. Language	316
2.2.1. Finding a Communal Voice	316
2.2.2. One Language, One History	319
2.2.3. Raising One's Voice	321
2.3. Story-Telling	322
2.3.1. Taking the Skin of a Lion	323
2.3.2. Private and Public Histories	325
3. Art and History	329
3.1. Photography	329
3.2. Painting and Sculpture	332
3.2.1. Promises of Wisdom and Civilization	332
3.2.2. Promises of Humanity	336
4. Literature and Historiography	338
4.1. Structure and Theme	338
4.1.1. Linearity and Gaps	338
4.1.2. Typographical Zones: Epigraph, Parergon, Dialogue	340
4.1.3. Genre and Intertextuality	345
4.1.4. Writer, Narrator and Reader	353
4.2. Histories by Herodotus, Almásy and Ondaatje	356
5. Conclusion	361
D. Conclusion	369
E. Bibliography	381