

Global Change and Intellectual Property Agencies

An Institutional Perspective

G. Bruce Doern

PINTER

London and New York

Science, Technology and the International Political Economy Series

Series Editor: John de la Mothe

Contents

Preface

vii

1. Global Change and the Core IP Trade-off: An Introduction	1
Purpose and focus	2
The main components of IP	5
IP institutions I: IP protection and dissemination and basic clusters of interests	6
IP institutions II: changing relations between national and international IP agencies	8
Structure and organisation	12
2. National and International IP Institutions: The Core Patent Cycle of Business and Basic Mandates	14
The central business of IP institutions: the application cycle for patents	14
IP agency mandates in brief: going beyond the protection function	17
Conclusions	25
3. The Evolution of Intellectual Property Agencies in the 1990s	26
Governing structures: emerging from contented obscurity	26
The place of IP in industrial and economic policy priorities	33
Conclusions	38
4. Patents, the Protection Role and Core IP Interests	40
Pendency, efficiency and agency revenues	41
Length and quality of protection	45
Big business and the protection role	49
The IP profession and the protection role	51
Conclusions	53
5. The IP Dissemination Roles and Dispersed Emerging Interests	55
IP dissemination I: informing about the current stock of IP information	56
IP dissemination II: a more aggressive value-added dissemination role?	58
IP dissemination III: new users and the fostering of an IP and innovation-oriented economic culture	60
Dispersed interests and the IP dissemination roles	64
Conclusions	67

6. Trademarks and IP Institutions	69
Trademarks and the IP trade-off	69
The trademark application and registration process	71
IP agencies and their core trademark business	72
Changing trademark issues and related institutional interests	74
Conclusions	78
7. Copyright Regulatory Institutions	80
Basic international protection	80
Key features of copyright regimes	81
Copyright, technological change and the information highway	85
Conclusions	90
8. The Emerging Role of the WTO: Trade-Related IP and Relations with WIPO	92
The WTO and TRIPs: key features and political origins	93
The TRIPs Council: early developments	95
The WTO–WIPO relationship	97
Broader trade community influence within nation states	100
Conclusions	101
9. Conclusions	102
Analytical summary	103
Issues in the nature of IP institutional change	106
Bibliography	113
Index	125