

Writing History in International Criminal Trials

RICHARD ASHBY WILSON

Human Rights Institute and School of Law
University of Connecticut

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Epigraph	page vi
Preface and Acknowledgments	vii
Figures and Tables	xii
Glossary	xiii
1 Assessing Court Histories of Mass Crimes	1
2 What Does International Actually Mean for International Criminal Trials?	24
3 Contrasting Evidence: International and Common Law Approaches to Expert Testimony	49
4 Does History Have Any Legal Relevance in International Criminal Trials?	69
5 From Monumental History to Microhistories	112
6 Exoneration and Mitigation in Defense Histories	140
7 Misjudging Rwandan Society and History at the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda	170
8 Permanent Justice: The International Criminal Court	192
9 Conclusion: New Directions in International Criminal Trials	216
Appendix	227
Bibliography	231
Index	245