

Korean Horror Cinema

---

Edited by Alison Peirse and Daniel Martin

EDINBURGH
University Press

Contents

---

Acknowledgements	vii
Foreword Julian Stringer	viii
Contributors	xi
Introduction Alison Peirse and Daniel Martin	i
Part I: Classic Korean Horror
1. Family, Death and the wonhon in Four Films of the 1960s Hyangjin Lee	23
2. Creepy Liver-Eating Fox Ladies: The Thousand Year Old Fox and Korea's Gumiho Alison Peirse and James Byrne	35
3. War Horror and Anti-Communism: From Piagol to Rainy Days Mark Morris	48
4. Mother's Grudge and Woman's Wail : The Monster-Mother and Korean Horror Film Eunha Oh	60
Part II: Contemporary 'Domestic' Horror
5. Heritage of Horrors: Reclaiming the Female Ghost in Shadows in the Palace Yun Mi Hwang	73
6. Acacia and Adoption Anxiety in Korean Horror Cinema Hye Seung Chung	87

7. Apartment Horror: Sorum and Possessed Nikki J. Y. Lee	101
8. The Face(s) of Korean Horror Film: Toward a Cinematic Physiognomy of Affective Extremes David Scott Diffrient	114
9. Death Bell and High-School Horror Chi-Yun Shin	131
Part III: Contemporary 'International' Horror
10. Between the Local and the Global: 'Asian Horror' in Ahn Byung-ki's Phone and Bunshinsaba Daniel Martin	145
11. Diary of a Lost Girl: Victoriana, Intertextuality and A Tale of Two Sisters Robert L. Cagle	158
12. From A Tale of Two Sisters to The Uninvited: A Tale of Two Texts Leung Wing-Fai	173
13. Oldboy goes to Bollywood: Zinda and the Transnational Appropriation of South Korean 'Extreme' Cinema Iain Robert Smith	187
14. Park Chan-wook's Thirst : Body, Guilt and Exsanguination Kyu Hyun Kim	199
Glossary	217
Bibliography	219
Index	236