

CONTENTS

Preface	XI
Introduction	1

Part One

Antebellum Era: The Black Heroine's Awakening

Chapter 1	The History of Mary Prince: First Slave Narrative Published by a Woman
	(a) Preliminary Remarks	9
	(b) The Slave Narrative: Formal Devices and Characteristic Features	10
	(c) Slave Narratives Versus Plantation Novels: The Other View of the Patriarchal Institution	17
	(d) From Slavery to Freedom	21
	(e) Nurturing Female Figures in the Face of the 'Peculiar Institution'	27
Chapter 2	Wilson's Our Nig : First Novel by a Black Woman in America
	(a) The Re-Discovery of a Novel	31
	(b) The Novel: Formal Devices	34
	(c) From Childhood to Adolescence: A Heroine's Growth	39
	(d) Mothers and Surrogate Mothers	47
Chapter 3	Jacobs' Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl : The Slave Mother's Voice
	(a) Fiction and Reality	58
	(b) Slave Narrative or 'Sentimental' Novel? Formal Aspects	61
	(c) True Woman Versus Heroic Woman, or White Heroine Versus Black Heroine	66
	(d) The Black Family and the 'Peculiar Institution'	78

Part Two

Woman's Era (1890-1900): Stereotype or Character?

Chapter 4 Harper's Iola Leroy: An Archetypal Novel?

- | | | |
|-----|---|-----|
| (a) | Antebellum and Postbellum America: A Transition | 85 |
| (b) | The Novel's Circular Structure | 91 |
| (c) | The Black Heroine: True Woman and Race Leader | 93 |
| (d) | The Black Community: A Search for Mothers | 108 |

Chapter 5 Hopkins' Contending Forces:
Assimilation or Protest?

- | | | |
|-----|-------------------------------------|-----|
| (a) | Biographical Remarks | 115 |
| (b) | Romance or Political Novel? | 119 |
| (c) | Sappho's Two Identities | 125 |
| (d) | The Self-Sufficient Black Community | 132 |

Chapter 6 Kelley's Megda: Black Characters, or White?

- | | | |
|-----|--|-----|
| (a) | An Unrecognized Writer | 136 |
| (b) | From Woman's Fiction to Girl's Fiction | 139 |
| (c) | The Heroine's Conversion | 141 |
| (d) | A Lesson for Whites and Blacks:
The Perfect Community | 147 |

Part Three

A Critical Reception: Biased Critics? 151

Part Four

Conclusions:

From the Antebellum Era to the Woman's Era:

A Development 165

Bibliography of Primary Sources 184

Bibliography of Secondary Sources 195