Contents

Contributors ix

Preface xi

Syntactic variation and the concept of prominence
Jenny Cheshire 1

Relativization strategies in Early Middle English (and after)
François Chevillet 18

Investigating the origins of Hiberno-English perfects:
the case of 'PII'
Markku Filppula 33

Polymorphy, redundancy and economy in dialectology:
the case of the Dorset dialect
Jean-Marc Gachelin 56

Relic words as tools for linguistic geography
Manfred Görlach 72

William Barnes, the Philological Society up to 1873 and the New English Dictionary
Bernard Jones 80

Entering lexical fields in Irish English
Jeffrey L. Kallen 101

Glottal stop and linking [h] in South African English:
with a note on two antique connections
Roger Lass 130

"Now, will that do for you?"
On the value of the SED recordings of spontaneous speech
Gunnel Melchers 152

Linguistic ideology and the Anglo-Saxon lineage of English
James Milroy 169

Varieties of English in contemporary Britain:
the grammatical characteristics of ethnic minority speakers in the north-east of England
Lesley Milroy – Christine Raschka 187

Was colonial American English a koiné?
Michael Montgomery 213

Stressed vowels in East Somerset:
an acoustic-phonetic case study
Terttu Nevalainen – Reijo Aulanko 236

Interpreting the orthographic token -vef(f) for -ve in the epistolary style of some [late] fifteenth century Londoners
Saara Nevanlinna 265

Studies on the structure of the Suffolk dialect
Kirsti Peitsara 284

The grammar of Northern Welsh English:
progressive verb phrases
Robert Penhallurick 308

(A)w{o,a}ke(en)(ed) (up)
Dennis R. Preston 343

Non-standard dialect literature and popular culture
Graham Shorrocks 385

Language contact and inherent variability:
the absence of hypercorrection in East Anglian present-tense verb forms
Peter Trudgill 412

Aspects of preposition placement in English
Nadine Van den Eynden 426

English dialectology and dialectometry
Wolfgang Viereck 447

A bibliography of Ossi Ihalainen
Compiled by Juhani Klemola 470