

Contents

Frontispiece: Judith and Holofernes by Artemesia Gentileschi
General Editor's Preface by David Jasper	vii
Preface	ix
1 Doing Violence to the Body: an Ethic of Reading and Writing	1
2 Through the Eyes of a Child: Looking for Victims in Toni Morrison's The Bluest Eye	22
3 An Apocalypse of Race and Gender: Body Violence and Forming Identity in Toni Morrison's Beloved	37
4 The Body Human: Violating the Self and Violating the Other, or Reading the Silenced Narrative – Patrick Süskind's Perfume	56
5 The Body Human and the Body Community: Getting the Story Write/Right in D. M. Thomas's The White Hotel	72
6 The Games Body-Politics Plays: a Rhetoric of Secrecy in Ian McEwan's The Innocent	88
7 Desiring Language and the Language of Desire: Consummating Body-Politics in J. M. Coetzee's The Age of Iron	104
8 (Re)telling the Old, Old Story	120
9 Concluding an Ethic of Reading and Writing: Literary Criticism as Confession	141
Select Bibliography	152
Index	158