

Contents

Acknowledgements x

Abbreviations, symbols, and other conventions xi

- 1 Introduction 1
- 2 Morphomic structures in synchrony and diachrony 9
 - 2.1 On the nature of morphemes and morphomic structures 9
 - 2.2 The value of diachrony and methods of diachronic diagnosis of 'morphology by itself' 10
 - 2.3 The problem of the morpheme and the diagnosis of morphomic patterning 17
 - 2.4 The object of enquiry 19
 - 2.5 Is autonomy isolation? 22
 - 2.6 A perspective on morphomic structures 24
- 3 The Romance languages and the Romance verb 25
 - 3.1 The Romance languages: a brief overview 25
 - 3.2 Sources of data and methods of analysis 28
 - 3.3 The structure of the Romance verb system and its Latin antecedents 29
- 4 PYTA and the remnants of the Latin perfective: Emergence of a morphomic pattern through loss of shared function 44
 - 4.1 Forms and functions 44
 - 4.2 Replications of PYTA 48
 - 4.2.1 Coherent change in the PYTA cells 50
 - 4.2.2 Avoidance of allomorphy in the PYTA cells 53
 - 4.2.3 Defectiveness and suppletion in PYTA 53
 - 4.2.4 Heterocclisis and PYTA in Romanian 55
 - 4.2.5 PYTA and syncretism 58
 - 4.2.6 Person and number endings and the PYTA domain 60
 - 4.2.7 Convergence and PYTA roots 62
 - 4.2.8 Reactions to lack of convergence 67
 - 4.3 Sporadic counterexamples to coherence in PYTA 71
 - 4.4 Systematic apparent counterexamples to coherence in Italo-Romance, Aromanian, and Aragonese 73
 - 4.5 Extramorphological motivation of the PYTA morphomic pattern? 80
 - 4.6 Conclusion 83

- 5 The L-pattern and the U-pattern: A phonologically created morphomic pattern 84
- 5.1 Origins and nature of the L-pattern and U-pattern 84
- 5.2 Independence from phonological or functional conditioning 91
- 5.3 Replications of the L/U-pattern 91
- 5.4 Coherence and convergence in the history of the L/U-pattern 93
- 5.5 Occasional counterexamples to coherence in the history of the L/U-pattern, and their significance 122
- 5.6 Systematic loss of coherence in Gallo-Romance: alignment with present subjunctive 141
- 5.7 On the role of phonological conditioning in the L/U-pattern: the evidence from incoherence in Daco-Romance and elsewhere 148
- 5.8 Conclusion 165
- 6 The N-pattern: Another phonologically created morphomic pattern 167
- 6.1 Phonological causes of the N-pattern 167
- 6.2 Replications of the N-pattern 174
- 6.2.1 The augment 175
- 6.2.2 The verb 'go' and other cases of N-pattern suppletion 192
- 6.2.3 N-pattern blending 209
- 6.2.4 N-pattern suppletion and the reflexes of DEBERE 212
- 6.2.5 N-pattern defectiveness 215
- 6.2.6 N-pattern distribution of periphrastic structures 219
- 6.2.7 N-pattern heteroclisis 220
- 6.2.8 Other manifestations of the N-pattern 225
- 6.2.9 Negative evidence from Sardinian? 227
- 6.3 What motivates the replication of the N-pattern? 229
- 6.3.1 Markedness 229
- 6.3.2 Differentiation of the first- and second-person plural 230
- 6.3.3 The special status of the verb 'go' 231
- 6.3.4 Phonological causation of the N-pattern? The role of stress 233
- 6.3.5 The problem of N-pattern alternants outside the N-pattern cells 241
- 6.4 Conclusion 245
- 7 The Latin third stem and its survival in Romance 247
- 7.1 Approaches to the Latin third stem 247
- 7.2 The Romance past participle 252
- 7.3 The Romanian supine and past participle 256
- 7.4 The continuants of the third stem and derivational morphology 260
- 7.5 Conclusion 262

8	The western Romance future and conditional	263
8.1	The Romance synthetic future and conditional	263
8.2	Is there a future/conditional morphomic pattern?	266
8.3	Conclusion	272
9	Root allomorphy and conjugation class	273
9.1	Conjugation-class membership and the L-pattern	273
9.2	Excursus: the Romance first conjugation and the absence of root allomorphy	277
9.3	Conclusion	283
10	New morphomic patterns from old	284
10.1	Typology: phonological deformation, clash, contraction, and coalescence	284
10.2	Phonological deformation	284
10.3	Clash	288
10.4	Contraction (and expansion)	289
10.5	Coalescence	292
10.6	Conclusion	295
11	Morphomic patterns, suppletion, and the Romance morphological landscape	296
11.1	Lexical suppletion in the Romance verb	296
11.2	Lexical suppletion in the noun and adjective	297
11.3	The conditions for lexical suppletion	300
12	Origins, substance, and persistence of Romance morphomic patterns	301
12.1	The origins of morphomic structures	301
12.2	The substance of morphomic structures	302
12.3	Morphological autonomy and extramorphological conditioning	306
12.4	The diachronic persistence of morphomic structures	310
12.4.1	Unity of meaning	310
12.4.2	The relation between the persistence of morphomic patterns and predictability	314
12.5	Conclusion	317
	Glosses of Latin verbs and verb prefixes cited in the text	319
	References and bibliographical abbreviations	323
	Index	350