

Contents

Introduction	vii
Acknowledgments	xxvii
Part 1: Mapping the Disciplinary Landscape
1 The Use of Arnold in a Darwinian World	3
2 Biology and Poststructuralism	15
3 “Theory,” Anti-Theory, and Empirical Criticism	29
4 Out of Eden and to the Left: A Review of John Ellis’s Literature Lost: Social Agendas and the Corruption of the Humanities	41
5 Literary Study and Evolutionary Theory: A Review of Books by Alexander Argyros, Walter Koch, Karl Kroeber, Robert Storey, Frederick Turner, and Mark Turner	45
6 Pinker, Dickens, and the Functions of Literature	63
7 Wilson’s Consilience and Literary Study	69
8 Ecocriticism, Cognitive Ethology, and the Environments of Victorian Fiction	85
Part 2: Adaptationist Literary Studies: Theory and Practical Criticism
1 The Deep Structure of Literary Representations	103
2 Universals in Literary Study	117
3 Human Universals and Literary Meaning: A Sociobiological Critique of Pride and Prejudice , Villette , O Pioneers! , Anna of the Five Towns , and Tess of the d’Urbervilles	129

4	Organism, Environment, and Literature	147
5	Adaptationist Criteria of Literary Value: Assessing Kurtén's Dance of the Tiger , Auel's The Clan of the Cave Bear , and Golding's The Inheritors	163
6	Human Nature and Literary Meaning: A Theoretical Model Illustrated with a Critique of Pride and Prejudice	187
Part 3: Darwin and Darwinism
1	The Origin of Charles Darwin: A Review of Three Darwin Biographies	219
2	Modern Darwinism and the Pseudo-Revolutions of Stephen Jay Gould	227
	References	247
	Index	265