

Table of Contents

List of Tables	xi
List of Figures	xv
List of Maps	xvii
Acknowledgments	xix
CHAPTER 1
Introduction	1
Overview and plan of the work	1
The historical context of urban creole studies	4
The creole continuum model: Discreteness	6
Inherent variation and the mesolect	9
The creole continuum model: Unidimensionality	11
Decreolization, the mesolect, and the creole continuum	15
The use of quantitative analytical methods	19
Terminology and orthography	21
CHAPTER 2
The Urban Speech Community of Kingston, Jamaica	23
Physical and historical sketch of Kingston	23
Social geography of Kingston and the Veeton district	27
Description of Veeton	37
The urban/rural dimension	43
Social class, status and occupation	50
Education	59

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Principal questions and procedures for the Veeton study	139
Preceding segment effects in the Veeton data	140
Following segment effects in the Veeton data	145
Insertion or deletion?	148
Grammatical category effects in the Veeton data	150
Intersecting variable processes	152
Estimating the rate of (TD)-deletion	156
Conclusions: Constraint order and “creole-ness” in (TD)-deletion	159
Comparison with another Creole: Deletion revisited	163
Unity versus lectal variety across the creole continuum	165

CHAPTER 6

Creole Pre-Verbal Past-Markers	167
Introduction	167
Tense, aspect and past-marking in creoles	169
TMA markers in Jamaican Creole	171
Stativity and punctuality	172
Anteriority: the classic syntactic account	177
Narrative clauses and anteriority: A discourse account	181
Temporal clauses	184
Irrealis clauses	186
Summary of coding and exclusions	189
Infrequency of preverbal tense markers	192
The use of ‘ben’ in Veeton	194
Tense and negation marking with ‘neva’	199
Description and distribution of pre-verbal ‘did’	203
Quantitative analysis of a three-way (Past) variable	206
Social distribution of pre-verbal ‘did/neva’	209
Linguistic variation of pre-verbal ‘did/neva’	212
Stativity and ‘did/neva’ marking	214
Anteriority, clause-type and ‘did/neva’ marking	215
Conclusions: Variable marking as a creole feature	220

CHAPTER 7

Past-Marking by Verb Inflection	223
Introduction: Verb inflection and non-marking	223
Morphological categories of the verb	225

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Other constraints: Stativity and anteriority revisited	228
Other constraints: Phonological environment revisited	230
Overview of inflection by morphological category	231
Exceptional and irregular verbs	232
Major morphological categories	234
Semi-weak verbs	236
Nonsyllabic verbs	238
Inflection across the mesolect	241
Variable inflection in other English Creoles	242
Variable inflection in African American diaspora varieties	248
Variable inflection in second-language acquisition studies	251
Stativity, punctuality, inflection, and the verb ‘have’	256
Clause-type, anteriority and verb inflection	260
Conclusion: Past-marking patterns in the Veeton mesolect	264

CHAPTER 8

Social Variation in the Veeton Speech Community	267
Nature of a creole speech community	267
Testing the polar stereotypes: Creole and English translation tasks	269
Evaluative norms in a creole speech community: Concord and contrast	273
Speaky-spoky: Consensus on conflicting norms	277
Discreteness revisited: Findings for the four variables summarized	279
Social dimensions of variation in a creole continuum	284
Correlating linguistic and social variation	287
Conclusions: Rethinking the creole continuum and the mesolect	292
References	297
Index of Language Varieties	321
Index of Subjects	323