

Contents

	Acknowledgments	page ix
	Preface: the 'science' of politics	xi
1	Pressure group theory and its problems	1
	Pressure group studies	3
	The problems	6
	The structural-functional approach	9
	The structural-differentiation approach	13
	Conclusion	17
2	The emergent nations	19
	The undeveloped country—traditional society	19
	The developing nation—transitional society	22
	Possibilities for the future	29
3	Totalitarianism	32
	The irrelevance of doctrine	32
	The methods of repression	33
	(i) Total terror	34
	(ii) Total regimentation	35
	(iii) Total control of opinion	40
	The value-orientated nature of totalitarianism	42
4	Continental Europe—the politics of immobility	44
	The fragmentation of political culture	44
	Party-group relations	47
	The constellation of political forces	51
	Value-oriented nature of politics	52
	The use of violence	55
	The decline of extremism	56
5	Scandinavia	60
	Group consensus	60
	The party system	63
		vii

CONTENTS

5	Scandinavia— continued
	The group universe	page 65
	Finland	69
	Attitude groups	71
6	The Anglo-American system—the autonomous interest group	73
	The process of interest articulation	73
	Some theoretical considerations	82
	Attitude groups in America	84
7	Attitude groups in Britain	88
	Norm-oriented and value-oriented groups	88
	The reaction to strain	91
	'The world's slow stain'	94
	The tactics of persuasion	96
8	Conclusion	100
	Initial hypotheses	100
	Typological conclusions	103
	Pressure groups and political culture	105
	Suggestions for further reading	107
	Bibliography	109