

Contents

Introduction	1
1. A crisis in Marxism	2
2. A general theory of exploitation	6
3. A simple model of Marxian exploitation	8
4. A brief outline	12
5. A defense of method	23
Part I
Exploitation and Class in Subsistence Economies	25
1 Exploitation in a Precapitalist Subsistence Economy	28
1. Two elementary subsistence economies	28
2. A private ownership, subsistence, production and exchange economy with stocks	33
3. Reswitching	44
4. Another characterization of exploitation in $\mathcal{E}(p)$: coalitions and cores	45
5. Summary	53
Appendix 1.1. $\mathcal{E}(p)$ as a model of unequal exchange between countries	55
2 The Labor Market and the Emergence of Class	61
1. A subsistence economy with labor market	62
2. Exploitation at reproducible solutions in $\mathcal{E}(p, w)$	65
3. The division of society into classes in $\mathcal{E}(p, w)$	69
4. The Class Exploitation Correspondence Principle (CECP)	78
Appendix 2.1. The transformation problem and the CECP	82
Appendix 2.2. The private ownership core of $\mathcal{E}(p, w)$	84

3	The Functional Equivalence of Labor and Credit Markets	87
1.	A subsistence economy with credit market	87
2.	The isomorphism between $\xi(p, w)$ and $\xi(p, r)$	89
3.	The existence of reproducible solutions in $\xi(p, w)$ and $\xi(p, r)$	95
4.	Exploitation versus alienation	104
	Part II
	Exploitation and Class in an Accumulating Economy	107
4	The Class Exploitation Correspondence Principle	113
1.	A model of accumulation	113
2.	A definition of exploitation	121
3.	The characterization of producers' exploitation status and class position	123
4.	The Class Exploitation Correspondence Principle (CECP)	129
5.	A preference-dependent definition of exploitation	132
6.	Summary	134
	Appendix 4.1. Exploited and exploiting coalitions of producers	135
5	The Dependence of Labor Value on the Market	147
1.	A summary of the idea	147
2.	The model of production and accumulation for a cone technology	153
3.	The CECP in the von Neumann model: a special case	164
4.	Labor embodied as compounded dated labor	168
6	Marxian Exploitation and Heterogeneous Labor	174
1.	The CECP with differential labor endowment	176
2.	Heterogeneous labor	178
3.	The scope of the labor theory of exploitation	183
	Appendix 6.1. On the exploitation of steel in a productive economy	186
	Part III
	Exploitation, Socialism, and Historical Materialism	189
7	A General Definition and Taxonomy of Exploitation	194
1.	Exploitation and alternatives	194
2.	Feudal exploitation	199
3.	Capitalist exploitation (with identical labor endowments)	202
4.	Capitalist exploitation (the general case)	208
5.	Socialist exploitation	212
6.	Formal specifications of exploitation	216

7. Exploitation with increasing returns to scale	219
8. The canonical exploited coalition and class struggle	226
9. Conclusion	233
8 Exploitation in Existing Socialism	238
1. Socialist exploitation under socialism	240
2. Status exploitation in existing socialism	243
3. Socially necessary exploitation and policy	248
4. Capitalist exploitation in existing socialism	250
5. Planning versus syndicalism and the market	257
6. Conclusion	259
9 Links with Historical Materialism	264
1. Socially necessary exploitation	265
2. The historical materialist imperative	270
3. Desert, return, and surplus	276
4. Needs	279
5. Why the labor theory of exploitation?	283
6. A sociology of injustice	288
References	291
Index	295