Verb Second in Medieval Romance

SAM WOLFE

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Series preface ix
Acknowledgements xi
List of abbreviations xiii

1. Introduction 1
   1.1 Medieval Romance word order and the V2 hypothesis 1
   1.2 Germanic Verb Second: Theoretical and empirical developments 4
   1.3 The Medieval Romance 'problem' 11
      1.3.1 V2 languages? 11
      1.3.2 Continuity or microvariation? 13
      1.3.3 V2 and its correlates 13
      1.3.4 V2 and diachrony 15
   1.4 Materials and methods 16

2. The V2 syntax of Medieval Romance 17
   2.1 Introduction 17
   2.2 Arguments for and against a V2 analysis 17
      2.2.1 The V2 hypothesis: Arguments and evidence 17
      2.2.2 Evidence against V2? 21
   2.3 Evaluating the claims 23
      2.3.1 The preverbal field and inversion phenomena 23
      2.3.2 Matrix/embedded asymmetries 28
      2.3.3 V1 and V3 'violations' 31
      2.3.4 Diachronic implausibility? 33

3. Old Italo-Romance 35
   3.1 Introduction 35
   3.2 Matrix clause syntax 37
      3.2.1 Verb placement 37
      3.2.2 The preverbal field and clitic placement 38
      3.2.3 Subject positions 48
      3.2.4 Verb First and Verb Third 50
   3.3 Embedded clause syntax 56
      3.3.1 Verb placement and SVO 56
      3.3.2 Embedded main clause phenomena 60
   3.4 Chapter summary 62

4. Old Gallo-Romance 65
4.1 Introduction 65
4.2 Matrix clause syntax 66
4.2.1 Verb placement 66
4.2.2 The preverbal field and clitic placement 67
4.2.3 Subject positions 72
4.2.4 Verb First and Verb Third 74
4.3 Embedded clause syntax 79
4.3.1 Verb placement and SVO 79
4.3.2 Embedded main clause phenomena 84
4.4 Chapter summary 86

5. Old Spanish 87
5.1 Introduction 87
5.2 Matrix clause syntax 89
5.2.1 Verb placement 89
5.2.2 The preverbal field and clitic placement 89
5.2.3 Subject positions 93
5.2.4 Verb First and Verb Third 94
5.3 Embedded clause syntax 97
5.3.1 Verb placement and SVO 99
5.3.2 Embedded main clause phenomena 102
5.3.3 A symmetrical V2 language? 103
5.4 Chapter summary 103

6. Old Sardinian 105
6.1 Introduction 105
6.2 Matrix clause syntax 106
6.2.1 Verb placement 106
6.2.2 The preverbal field and clitic placement 107
6.2.3 One half of the V2 constraint? 110
6.2.4 Subject positions 112
6.2.5 Verb Third 115
6.3 Embedded clause syntax 116
6.3.1 Embedded word order in Wolfe (2015c) 116
6.3.2 New data on Old Sardinian embedded clauses 117
6.4 Chapter summary 119

7. Rethinking Medieval Romance V2 121
7.1 The syntax of Medieval Romance 121
7.1.1 Summary 121
7.1.2 Commonalities and the V2 bottleneck 122

7.1.3 Fin- and Force-V2 and microvariation 124
7.1.3.1 Verb Third 124
7.1.3.2 Verb First 126
7.1.3.3 The syntax of SI 129
7.1.3.4 Matrix/embedded asymmetries 130
7.1.3.5 A note on the V2 correlates 133
7.1.4 The cartography of the clause 134
7.2 Changes in clausal structure 134
7.2.1 Common syntactic properties: Early Medieval Romance 134
7.2.2 The Later Medieval Romance split 138
7.2.3 From Fin- to Force-V2 139
7.2.4 Old Sardinian and the great leap from Latin to Romance 141
7.3 Summary 146

8. Conclusion 147
8.1 Summary of major findings 147
8.2 New perspectives on the Medieval Romance 'problem' 149
8.3 Future research 150

References 153
Index 187