

Contents

Acknowledgments.....	9
1 Introduction: Listening as Literary Practice	11
2 Sounding Voices	23
2.1 Voice, Language, and Text	26
2.2 Toward a Theory of the Sounding Voice: Body, Medium, Performance.....	38
2.3 Auditory Imagination, Soundscape, and Voice	57
3 The Scream and the Word: (Non)Human Voices in Richard Powers's The Echo Maker	63
3.1 Human Voice, Primal Echoes, and Language	68
3.2 Natural Soundscape, Animal Voices, and Ecofiction	83
3.3 Media Ecology and Voice in The Echo Maker	96
4 Singing Time: Vocal Performance and Temporality in Richard Powers's The Time of Our Singing	103
4.1 The Physics of Voice and Time	109
4.2 Voice and Possible Worlds in The Time of Our Singing	117
5 Listening for Voice.....	129
5.1 Listening, Resonance, and Voice.....	131
5.2 Listening Features	135
5.3 Intention and Attention.....	138
6 Polyphonic Soundscapes: Vocal Resonance and Place in Karen Tei Yamashita's I Hotel	145
6.1 The Textualization of Polyphonic Soundscapes	153
6.2 'Live' Bodies, Vocal Resonance, and Place in I Hotel	164
6.3 Politics of Voice and Listening.....	175

7	A Listening Self: Vocal Sound Event and Intersubjectivity in Jonathan Safran Foer's Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close	185
	7.1 Auditory Experience and the Listening Self	190
	7.2 War, Terrorism, and Sound Event	194
	7.3 Intersubjective Networks and Urban Soundscapes	207
8	By Way of Conclusion: Silence in Jennifer Egan's A Visit from the Goon Squad	223
	8.1 Silences of Anticipation	228
	8.2 Vocal Absence and Intermedial Pause	233
	8.3 From Sound to Silence	241
	Works Cited	245