

Contents

Foreword	xi
Preface	xv
Acknowledgments	xvii

1. The Study of Career Stratification in Organizations

Introduction	1
Stratification in Organizations	4
Why Study Job Status Attainments?	7
Beyond the Pyramid Imperative: The Need for Studying Subgroups and Career Timing	8
Personnel Policy Descriptions	10
Employee Perceptions and Misperceptions	13
Two Conflicting Models of the Opportunity Structure	16
Social Science Theories about Opportunity	19
Career Systems and the Tournament Model	25
Generalizability	28
Questions for This Study	31

2. Tournament Mobility: A Longitudinal Analysis of the Pattern of Career Moves

Introduction	38
Theoretical Background	39
Method and Analysis	45
Discussion and Summary	61
Appendix 2.A: Mean and Standard Deviation of 1975 Wages by Status Level	65
Appendix 2.B: Career Tree for 1960–1962 Entering Cohort for Employees Attaining Foreman or Lower-Management Levels by December 1962	65

3. Changing Patterns of Promotion Chances during Periods of Growth and Contraction

Introduction	66
Examining Promotions: Reasons and Models		67
Analysis	75
Conclusions	92

4. The Attributes of Jobs and Their Changing Effects on Earnings and Promotions

Introduction	97
Analysis	105
Conclusions	128
Policy Implications: The Reexamination of Job Status		131
Appendix 4.A: Job Evaluation—Building a Normative System around Economic Goals		133

5. The Structural Differentiation of Employees and Its Amplifying Effects on Earnings

Introduction	137
Analysis	144
Conclusions	162
Appendix 5.A: College Status Effects on Promotions		166

6. The Enduring Effects of Early Jobs and Earnings

Introduction	175
Hypotheses	179
Analysis	183
Conclusions	198

7. Continuity and Change in the Career Attainment Process in a Corporation during Growth and Contraction

Introduction	201
Changes in Career Trajectories: Developmental Hypotheses	204
Changes in Career Trajectories: Selectivity Hypotheses		206
Effects of Affirmative Action	209
The Empirical Model	212
Cross-sectional Analysis for 1965	213
Historical Effects on Career Trajectories	217
Components of Earnings within and across Statuses		222
Conclusions	230

8. Organization Careers and Life-Cycle Stages: Social Psychological Implications of Career Structure

Introduction	236
Biological and Sociological Explanations of the Midcareer Life Stage	238
Age–Promotion Curves and Their Implications for Motivation	250
Stratification of Socialization Processes: Differentiation and Homogenization	252
Conclusions	256

9. Conceptualizing Organization Career Systems

Introduction	258
Evidence for and against Human Capital Theory	260
Evidence for and against Structural Theory	263
The Tournament as a Structural Theory of Ability	265
Structurally Determined Properties of Ability Signals	268
Critical Periods: Properties of Individuals or of Career Systems?	270
Conclusions	273
Appendix 9.A: Complexities in the Career Tournament—Job Statuses and Minor Tournaments	276

10. Policy Implications: Reconceptualizing and Redesigning Career Systems

Introduction	280
The Effects of Career Systems: Beyond the Pyramid Imperative	281
The Tournament As a Model of Entire Career Systems	283
Preconditions for Opportunity in Tournament Career Systems	285
Preconditions for Efficiency in Tournament Career Systems	286
Policy Implications for Procedural Reforms	294
Redesigning Career Systems: Destratification for Structural Reform	300
Conclusion: Toward a New Conception of Careers in Organizations	307

References	309
-------------------	-----

Index	323
--------------	-----