

Contents

1	Introduction	I
PART ONE: TO 1949
2	The Yangzi Delta Ecosystem	21
3	Commercialization and Family Production	44
4	Commercialization and Managerial Agriculture	58
5	Commercialization and Involutionary Growth	77
6	Peasants and Markets	93
7	Imperialism, Urban Development, and Rural Involution	115
8	Two Kinds of Village Communities	144
PART TWO: AFTER 1949
9	Restructuring the Old Political Economy	165
10	Collective, Family, and Sideline Production	199
11	Growth Versus Development in Agriculture	222
12	Rural Industrialization	252
13	Capitalism Versus Socialism in Rural Development	266
14	Peasant-Worker Villages	288
PART THREE: CONCLUSION
15	A Summing Up	305
16	Some Speculations	325

Appendixes

- A. Socioeconomic Profiles of Eight Yangzi Delta Villages, 337.
 B. Population and Cultivated Acreage in the Yangzi Delta, 1393–1932, 340. C. Town Formation and Change in Shanghai Municipality During the Ming-Qing and the Republic, 343.
 D. Off-Farm Employment in Huayangqiao, 1950–1985, 347.
 E. The Changing Composition of Gross Output Value in Huayang and Rural China, 354. F. Incomes of Collective, Joint, and Private Enterprises, 357

References

Interviews, 361. The Village Informants, 370. Sources Cited, 372

Character List	391
Index	407