

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	x
I. Introduction: Metaphysical Poetry and the notion of turning	1
1. Donne's notion(s) of turning	1
2. Turning in the context of the Early Modern period	4
2.1 Religious turning	4
2.2 Turning within the world and cosmos	22
2.3 Turning towards harmony	26
3. Why Metaphysical Poetry?	28
4. Approach and structure	35
II. Turning in "Goodfriday, 1613. Riding Westward"	41
1. A paradigm of turning	41
1.1 Turning – the central concern of the poem	42
1.2 The worlds of the poem	44
1.3 Imagination, memory and vision	48
2. Turns performed on the level of language	56
2.1 The title	57
2.2 Structure	58
2.3 Adverbials	62
2.4 Determiners	68
2.5 Pronouns and forms of address	69
2.6 Verbs	71
2.7 Syntax	76
3. The genre of "Goodfriday" – turning as conversion	82
3.1 "Goodfriday" as a conversion narrative	82
3.2 "Goodfriday" as a meditation	88
3.3 "Goodfriday" as a prayer	91
4. Turning as pilgrimage – turning and spatial relations	94
4.1 Geometry	95
4.2 Geography	97
4.3 Astronomy	101
5. Turning and music – turning as tuning	103
6. Turning as transformation	104
7. Circular turning and self-referentiality	107
8. Conclusion	113

III. Spatial turning in Herbert's "The Search"	115
1. Turning as a spatial notion	115
1.1 Geometry and mystical geometry	118
1.2 Geography	121
1.3 Astronomy	124
2. "The Search" as a sacred parody	125
3. Turning in "The Search"	129
3.1 Title and structure	129
3.2 The first stanza: establishing space and relation	132
3.3 Stanzas two to six: the speaker as the centre of attention	138
3.4 Stanzas seven to twelve: God as the centre of attention	147
3.5 Stanzas 13 to 15: convergence and prospective union	155
4. The speaker's search as a pilgrimage	161
5. Progress towards God in Donne's "Thou hast made me"	164
6. The written word as an approach to God in "Coloss. 3.3"	167
7. Conclusion	171
IV. The transforming power of language in "The Canonization"	173
1. Turning as transformation	173
2. The transformation of the lovers in "The Canonization"	174
2.1 Title and form	178
2.2 Stanza 1: the lover(s)' low position in the present	180
2.3 Stanza 2: the lovers and poetry – a refutation of secular love poetry	186
2.4 Stanza 3: the lovers' mystical transformation	189
2.5 Stanza 4: the lovers and poetry – their preservation as saints	201
2.6 Stanza 5: the lovers' elevated position in the future	208
3. The transformation of language in "Prayer (I)"	213
4. Conclusion	220
V. Turning and Tuning in Herbert's "The Temper (I)"	221
1. Turning and music	221
1.1 Turning, tuning and movement: man as a musical instrument	223
1.2 Music and poetry: the poet as God's instrument and musician	229
2. The speaker's tuning in "The Temper (I)"	233
2.1 The title	234
2.2 The first stanza: conditions for praise	235
2.3 The second stanza: establishing space	239

2.4 The third and fourth stanzas: fighting God	243
2.5 Stanzas five and six: finding peace	253
2.6 Stanza seven: prospective union	259
3. Spiritual attunement in “Hymne to God my God, in my sickness”	261
3.1 The title	262
3.2 The first stanza: the speaker as music	265
3.3 Stanzas two to four: the speaker as map	266
3.4 Stanzas five and six: approaching Christ	276
4. Conclusion	281
VI. Circular turning in “La Corona”	283
1. Turning in “La Corona”	283
1.1 Title and form	284
2. The first sonnet: a poem	287
2.1 The different crowns found in “La Corona”	288
2.2 Thirst and salvation	295
3. Sonnets two to four: the speaker’s different perspectives	297
3.1 The second sonnet: from heaven to earth – God becomes human	297
3.2 The third sonnet: the speaker looks down on Christ in the crib	301
3.3 The fourth sonnet: Christ turns from child into saviour	306
4. Sonnets five to seven: the speaker’s relation to Christ	308
4.1 The fifth sonnet: the speaker looks up to Christ Crucified	308
4.2 The sixth sonnet: the speaker goes with Christ from death to life	313
4.3 The seventh sonnet: Christ shows the way from earth to heaven	318
5. Circularity and progress in “La Corona”	324
5.1 The speaker’s turn to Christ	328
6. “A Wreath”: a miniature corona	330
7. Conclusion	336
VII. Bibliography	339
A. Works by Donne and Herbert	339
B. Other Texts	339
C. Secondary Literature	344
VIII. Index	362
IX. Summary	369