Preface	i
Chapter 1: General Introduction
I. Migration in Context	1
II. Migration Surveys	7
III. Plan of the Book	9
IV. Some Notes on Format	10
V. Caveats and Brickbats	11
Chapter 2: Theoretical Perspectives on Migration by A.S. Oberai and Richard E. Bilsborrow
I. The Determinants of Migration	14
A. Disciplinary approaches	14
B. Some specific theories of the determinants of migration	15
C. Underlying causes of rural-urban migration	17
D. Toward an integrated theory of the determinants of migration	19
II. Consequences of Migration	21
A. Consequences of migration for migrants and their households	22
B. Consequences of migration for areas of origin and destination	23
C. Consequences of migration for national development	29
III. Implications of Theory for Data Collection	29
Chapter 3: Conceptualising Territorial Mobility by Guy Standing
I. Introduction	31
II. Conceptualising Migration	32
A. Spatial criteria	32
B. Residence criteria	34
C. Temporal criteria	35
D. Activity criteria	37
III. Mobility Status Categories	38
A. Permanent migrants, or transients	38
B. Temporary migrants, or sojourners	39
C. Commuters	40

	Page
D. Transfers	41
E. Long-term migrants	41
F. Non-migrants	42
G. Miscellaneous classifications	42
IV. Types of Migration	45
A. Rate and incidence of migration	46
B. Gross and net migration	46
C. Migration streams and counter-streams	48
D. Types of migration stream	48
E. Lifetime vs. fixed-period migration	49
F. Circulation and oscillation	50
G. Chain migration	52
H. Stage migration and step migration	52
I. The hypothesis of mobility transition	53
J. General typologies of population mobility	54
K. The migratory moments	57
V. Concluding Recommendations	57
Chapter 4: Survey Design
by Richard E. Bilsborrow	60
I. Interrelationships between Survey Objectives and Survey/Sample Design	61
A. Effects of definition of migrants on survey/sample design	61
B. Alternative purposes of migration surveys	63
II. A Critical Appraisal of Existing Migration Survey Methodology	64
III. Implications of Survey Purpose for Questionnaire Design	74
Design	73
IV. Subject Content, Questionnaire Length and Use of Modules	77
V. Data Collection Approaches: Single Round Surveys Versus Alternative Systems	79
VI. Choice of Respondent	82
VII. Locus of Interview: Long-term Versus Short-Term Migrants	85
Chapter 5: Sample Design
by Richard E. Bilsborrow

I.	Relationship of Sample Design to Survey Design and Objectives	88
II.	General Considerations in Designing Samples for Surveys of Internal Migration	88
	A. Population coverage and domains of analysis	89
	B. Sampling frames	90
	C. Probability samples versus judgment samples and quota samples	91
	D. Sample size	94
	E. Stratification and multi-stage sampling	96
	F. Cluster sampling	98
III.	The Key Problem: The "Needle in the Haystack" or Finding the Right Haystack?	100
	A. The nature of the problem: "Rare elements"	100
	B. Use of disproportionate sampling fractions in stratified sampling	103
	C. Two-phase sampling	107
	D. Tracing techniques	110
	E. Multiplicity surveys	113
IV.	Related Sampling Matters	114
	A. Subsampling	114
	B. The community sample	115
	C. Implications of sample design for analysis	116
V.	Examples of Survey/Sample Designs in Recent Migration Surveys	117
	A. Some earlier migration surveys	117
	B. The Punjab survey in India	121
	C. The Ecuador Sierra survey	124
VI.	Concluding Remarks	129
Chapter 6: Identification of Migrants and Collection of Demographic and Social Information in Migration Surveys
by A.S. Oberai
I.	Introduction	130
II.	Need for and Significance of Demographic and Social Information in Migration Analysis	131
III.	Survey Questionnaires	140
	Submodule A: Characteristics of household members	140
	Submodule B: Out-migrants	146
	Identification of out-migrants	149
	Background of out-migrants	150
	Submodule C: In-migrants	155

	Page
Background and other information from in-migrants	158
Submodule D: Return-migrants	165
Submodule E: Potential migrants	172
Submodule F: Fertility	177
Part 1: Short questionnaire	177
Part 2: Detailed questionnaire	180
Annex: Codes (Relationship)	185

Chapter 7: Migrants and the Labour Process by Guy Standing

I. Introduction	186
II. A Basic Household Activity Roster	187
A. The need for a summary roster	187
B. Some conceptual preliminaries	189
– The notion of household	189
– Main and secondary activity	190
– Activity	190
– “Work”, “job”, and “employment”	190
C. Summary activity roster	191
III. Labour Force Experience	197
A. Post-school work experience	197
B. Labour force experience prior to migration	204
C. Post-migration work experience	216
D. Recent labour force experience	228
E. Return-migrants’ labour experience	250
F. Acquisition and utilisation of skills	256
G. Parental employment	260
IV. Concluding Remarks	262
Appendix: A Note on Attitudinal Data	263

Chapter 8: Income Transfers and Remittances by Guy Standing

I. Introduction	264
II. Remittances in Context	265
III. A Conceptual Framework	268
A. Definitional dimensions of remittances	269
B. Socio-geographical dimensions	270
C. Temporal dimensions: Types of migrants	271
D. “Use”, “purpose” and “impact” of remittances	274
The remittance sub-modules	276
IV. Transfers to Out-migrants	277

	Page
V. Transfers from out-migrants	285
VI. Remittances and Return Migrants	295
VII. Remittances and In-migrants	305
VIII. Concluding Observations	315
Annex: Simplified “core” module for all households	316
Chapter 9: Migration, Production and Technological Change by A.S. Oberai
I. Introduction	317
II. Migration and Technological Change	319
A. The impact of migration on technological change and agricultural production	320
– Impact through human resource flows	320
– Impact through income and capital flows	322
– Impact through information flows	322
B. The impact of technological change in agriculture	323
– Impact on output and labour absorption	323
– Impact on land and income distribution	326
– Impact on rural out-migration	327
III. Survey Questionnaires	327
Sub-module A: Farming business	327
Sub-module B: Family business (or enterprise) other than farming	349
Sub-module C: Effects of migration on (farm or non-farm) family business	368
Part 1: Effects of out-migration of family member(s) on (farm or non-farm) family business	369
Part 2: Effects of in- and/or return-migration to household on (farm or non-farm) family business	372
Chapter 10: Migration, Land and Household Assets
I. Introduction	374
II. A Typology of Assets	374
III. Some Analytical Observations and Empirical Evidence	376
IV. Submodule for Land Assets	382
V. Housing, Other Dwellings and Consumer Durables	392
VI. Submodule on Financial Assets and Debts	403
VII. Concluding Observations	406

Chapter 11: The Need for and Design of Community-level Questionnaires by Richard E. Bilborrow
I. Why Collect Community-Level Information	407
A. Community variables in social analysis	407
B. The special need for community-level information in migration surveys	409
II. Issues in Model Formulation: The Use of Individual and Community Variables in the Analysis	415
III. The Collection of Community-level Data	417
A. General neglect in surveys	417
B. What is a “community”? In theory and in practice	418
C. Examples of political-administrative definitions	420
D. The two types of community variables	423
E. The computation of community variables from household survey data: possibilities and limitations	424
F. The five sources of data for global variables	426
IV. The Content of the Prototype Community Questionnaire for Migration Analysis	429
A. Introduction and guidelines	429
B. Core Community Questionnaire	432
C. Supplementary community submodules	456
D. Adaptation of questionnaires for urban areas	459
V. Summary and Conclusions	463
Annex A: Community Questionnaires Reviewed	465
Annex B: Supplementary Submodules	467
Chapter 12: Concluding Observations on Implementing a Migration Survey	487
I. Principal Survey and Sample Design Recommendations	487
II. Administrative Considerations	488
A. Budget and personal constraints	488
B. Survey administration decisions	489
C. Field operations and data processing	492
III. Suggestions Regarding Questionnaire Priorities	494
IV. A Final Point	497
Bibliography	499
Subject Index	536
Author Index	543
