

Table of Contents

Introduction: Ritual Baths and Ritual Purity, the Last Fifty Years	17
Chapter One: Misleading Use of Terminology: The “miqveh,” “bet tevilah,” and other “Ritual Baths”	32
Chapter Two: The Evolving, Non-Monolithic “Ritual Bath”	45
Chapter Three: Pre-Rabbinic, Non-Rabbinic, and Rabbinic Ritual Immersion Practices in the Making	56
Divided Stairways, Dual Entrances, and Sectarian Viewpoints	56
“Niṣṣoq,” Double Pools, and the “Oṣar”	62
Views from Qumran and the Rabbis	73
Conclusion	103
Chapter Four: Did the Author of P. Oxyrhynchus 840 Know What a “Miqveh” Was?	104
Introduction	104
The Exchange between “the Savior” and the High Priest	106
Running, Natural, and “Living” Waters	110
Split Stairways do not Make a “Miqveh” Either	113
Spiritual Perceptions of Water in Antiquity and the Meaning of the Fragment	122
a) Ancient Near Eastern and Biblical Views	123
b) From Jeremiah to the Rabbis	130
c) Spiritualizing Water: From the Late Second Temple Period to the Gospel of John	137
d) P. Oxyrhynchus 840 and Jewish Ritual Immersion	146
Conclusion	151
Chapter Five: Further Observations on Stone Vessel Finds and Ritual Purity in Light of Talmudic Sources	153
Conclusion	180
Chapter Six: The Stepped Pools of the Western Acropolis at Sepphoris	184
Chapter Seven: Understanding the Pools: Biblical Perceptions of Purity and the Habitus of the Jews of ‘Ereṣ Israel	198

Chapter Eight: Domestic Judaism and the “Well-Ordered Bayit:” Who Bathed/Immersed in the Stepped Pools at Sepphoris and Why? . . .	210
Introduction	210
Popular Devotion to Ritual Purity Practices: The Rabbis’ Perspective . . .	213
Hand Washing before Eating	215
Bodily Immersion and Sexuality	223
Popular Perceptions of Water	230
The Primary Locus of Ritual Purity Rites after 70 C. E.: The Home, Family, and the Larger Community of Israel	241
Chapter Nine: Priests, Purities, and the Jews of Roman and Late Antique Galilee— Rethinking the Priests of Sepphoris and the Mishmarot	249
Introduction	249
Priests at Sepphoris	252
Priests at Tiberias	260
Priestly Memory, Identity, and Concerns in Galilee	266
Ritual Bathing and Priests	279
The Priests, the People, and the Synagogue	283
Some Conclusions and Questions worth Pursuing	292
Chapter Ten: Non-Rabbinic Ritual Immersion Practices in Post-Talmudic Sources	297
Chapter Eleven: From Stepped Pools to Miqva’ot and the Society that Produced Them	307
Concluding Thoughts	324
Postscript: From Roman Galilee to Nineteenth-Century Chesterfield, Connecticut	332
List of Figures	343
Bibliography	344
Index of Primary Sources	378
Index of Places	394
Index of Foreign Terms, Phrases, and Expressions	398
Index of Subjects	408