

1. Introduction	1
2. Childhood	8
2.1 Changes in childhood and childhood concepts	8
2.2 The emergence of an attractive children's culture of its own	12
2.2.1 Toys, games and pastimes	12
2.2.2 Books, magazines and comics	17
2.2.3 Clothes and fashion	19
2.2.4 A holiday and leisure time culture	22
2.2.5 The nursery	35
2.3 British upper- and upper-middle-class lifestyles	37
2.3.1 Edwardian housing and its consequences	37
2.3.2 Special servant-children relationships	44
2.3.3 Different concepts of parent-child interaction	50
3. Food: reasons for its importance in Victorian, Edwardian and inter-war fantasy	52
3.1 Food as a social marker	53
3.2 Changes in food production, storage and preparation	57
3.3 Eating socialization in Victorian and Edwardian times	61
3.3.1 Strict mealtimes	61
3.3.2 Children's consumer status and the training of rigid table manners	63
3.3.3 Psychological effects of the pressure centering around meals	68
3.4 Changes in food culture and eating socialization	72
3.4.1 Today's food culture	72
3.4.2 Today's eating socialization	74
3.5 The interaction of history/reality and literature	76
4. Fantasy: fairy tale, fantasy and child readers	79
4.1 Different types of fantasy and diverse modes of experience	88
4.2 Further attempts to (re-)define fantasy: the emergence of fantasy within children's literature	94
5. "It's always tea-time": food as a cultural metaphor in Lewis Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and Through the Looking-Glass	124
5.1 Food functions	129
5.1.1 The interconnectedness of realistic and fantastic uses of food	129
5.1.2 Reversed logic	133
5.1.3 Food absurdities as nonsense	134
5.1.4 Poetry	156

5.1.5 Nonsense poems and songs	161
5.1.6 Dream, reality and fantasy	172
5.1.7 Time, chronology, logic and memory	178
5.2 Conclusion	182
6. “I want my tea,” “We must have dinner, anyway”: food as a cultural metaphor in Edith Nesbit’s Five Children and It	187
6.1 Realism and fantasy, metafiction, adult and child readers, credibility and suspense of disbelief	188
6.2 Food functions	201
6.2.1 The interconnectedness of realistic and fantastic uses of food	201
6.2.2 Meals interspersed with adventures or adventures interspersed with meals	213
6.2.3 Meals as dramaturgy: the pressure of mealtimes	219
6.2.4 Moral/spiritual encouragement, sensuous enjoyment and moral/legal considerations	222
6.3 Conclusion	227
7. Eat and drink in style and enjoy it: food as a cultural metaphor in Kenneth Grahame’s The Wind in the Willows	229
7.1 Food functions	241
7.1.1 Identity and lifestyle	241
7.1.2 Eating and drinking as an integral part of action and characterization	253
7.1.3 Atmosphere, sensuousness, domestic comfort, personal well-being and security	269
7.1.4 Moral/spiritual encouragement and affirmation of one’s lifestyle through physical nourishment	274
7.1.5 The role and functions of poetry and songs	280
7.2 Conclusion	287
8. To eat or to be eaten: food as a cultural metaphor in J.R.R. Tolkien’s The Hobbit or There and Back Again	289
8.1 Food functions	293
8.1.1 Identity and lifestyle	293
8.1.2 Eating and drinking as an integral part of action and characterization	305
8.1.3 Food and meals as chronotopes	319
8.1.4 Physical nourishment and moral/spiritual encouragement as the foundation of stability, security and peace	328
8.1.5 To eat or to be eaten: the eating hierarchy	332
8.1.6 Stories, tales, poems, songs and music	367
8.2 Conclusion	374
9. General conclusion: childhood, food and fantasy	379
Bibliography	383