

CONTENTS

List of Contributors	iv
List of Figures	v
List of Tables	vi
Acknowledgements	vi
Preface	vii

PART 1: Concepts and Methods

1.	Pathology and health in past societies: an introduction. Helen Bush and Marek Zvelebil	3
2.	Concepts of health and stress. Helen Bush	11
3.	Accounting for the evolution of psychosomatic phenomena: did unco-operative Upper Palaeolithic people become ill and die? Michael E. Hyland and Win Scutt	23
4.	Health, adaptation and maladaptation in past societies. Alan Goodman	31
5.	Direct genetic and immunological information in the reconstruction of health and biocultural conditions of past populations: a new prospect for archaeology. Cristina Cattaneo	39
6.	Dental histology as an index of past community health. Simon Hillson	53

PART 2: Case Studies

7.	Patterns of life and death: the palaeodemography of Medieval York. Anne Grauer	67
8.	Epidemiological studies of dental enamel hypoplasias in Mexico and Bradford: their relevance to archaeological skeletal studies. Keith Dobney and Alan Goodman	81
9.	Anaemia in Roman Britain: Poundbury Camp. Patty Stuart-Macadam	101
10.	Interpreting measures of community health during the Late Prehistoric period in Middle Tennessee: a biocultural approach. Leslie Eisenberg	115
11.	Health status of European populations at the agricultural transition and the implications for the adoption of farming. Christopher Meiklejohn and Marek Zvelebil	129