

C O N T E N T S

PART I Myth Is the Language of Historical Memory 1

Chapter 1 Exposition: The Frontier as Myth and Ideology 3

Chapter 2 Myth and Historical Memory 13
Myth and Ideology; Whose Myth Is It?

Chapter 3 The Frontier Myth as a Theory of Development 33

PART II The Language of the Frontier Myth 49

Chapter 4 Regeneration Through Violence: History as an Indian War, 1675–1820 51

The Wars of Dispossession; Captive and Hunter; The Myth and Ideology of Agrarianism; Natural Aristocracy and the Cult of Washington; The Dangerous Frontiersman and the Guilt of Dispossession

Chapter 5 Ideology and Fiction: The Role of Cooper 81

*The Choice of Genre; The Leatherstocking Myth; The Cooperian
Code: Race, Sex, and Class*

PART III Metropolis vs. Frontier 107

Chapter 6 The Backwash of a Closing Frontier: Industrialization
and the Hiatus of Expansion, 1820–1845 109

*Facing the Desert: The Problem of Leadership in Irving's West;
Frontier Presidents: Transformation of the Soldier Aristocrat;
Transformation of the Hunter: Jacksonian Outlaws*

Chapter 7 Utopia/Dystopia: Plantation, Factory, and City,
1820–1845 138

*The Plantation as Utopia; The Factory as Plantation; Dystopia:
The Last Days of Sodom*

*PART IV Myth of a New Frontier:
Renewal and Breakdown, 1845–1850 159*

Chapter 8 A Choice of Frontiers: Texas, Mexico, and the Far
West, 1835–1850 161

Houston, Crockett, and the Return of the Frontiersman; The Conquest of Mexico: Hunters or Conquistadores?

Chapter 9 The Myth That Wasn't: Literary Responses to the Mexican War, 1847–1850 191

Dime Novels and Romances; Frémont and Carson: Heyward and Hawkeye in California

PART V The Railroad Frontier, 1850–1860 209

Chapter 10 Prophecy of the Iron Horse 211

Chapter 11 The Ideology of Race Conflict, 1848–1858 227

Chapter 12 The Inversion of the Frontier Hero: William
Walker and John Brown, 1855–1860 242

*William Walker: The American as Conquistador; John Brown:
Hawkeye as Revolutionary*

PART VI Toward the Last Frontier, 1860–1876 279

Chapter 13 Regimentation and Reconstruction: The Emergence of a Managerial Ideology, 1860–1873 281

The Manager as Soldier-Aristocrat

Chapter 14 The Reconstruction of Class and Racial Symbolism, 1865–1876 301

The New Paternalism; Paupers, Proletarians, and Indians; The “Peace Policy” in Practice, 1869–1875

Chapter 15 The New El Dorado, 1874 325

*Newspapers as Mythmakers; The “Red Spectre of the Commune”;
Looking for Paradise: The Frontier as Escape; Paradise Discovered;
Philanthropy, Effeminacy, and Corporate Paternalism; Paradise
Postponed*

PART VII The Boy General, 1839–1876 371

Chapter 16 West Point, Wall Street, and the Wild West, 1839–1868 373

Chapter 17 The Boy General Returns; or, Custer’s Revenge, 1868–1876 398

PART VIII The Last Stand as Ideological Object, 1876–1890 433

Chapter 18 To the Last Man: Assembling the Last Stand
Myth, 1876 435

*The Making of an Ideological Object: Aims and Anticipations;
The Centennial War; Seizing the Occasion; The Great Antagonist:
Sitting Bull as Metaphor; “Sioux Civilization” in South Carolina;
Myth, Anti-Myth, and No-Myth-at-All*

Chapter 19 The Indian War Comes Home:
The Great Strike of 1877 477

*Strikers as Savages; The Myth-Ideology of a Progressive Ruling
Class: The Nation in 1876–1877*

Chapter 20 Morgan’s Last Stand: Literary Mythology and the Specter of Revolution, 1876–1890 499

*The Boy Hero: Custer, Ragged Dick, and Tom Sawyer; From the Black Hills to “Buffland”: John Hay’s The Breadwinners;
Mythological Self-Criticism: Mark Twain’s Frontier; The Spirit of
Massacre and the Instinct of Progress; Conclusion and Prologue:
The Turn of the Century*

NOTES 533

BIBLIOGRAPHY 597

INDEX 619