

Gender and the Intersubjective Sublime in Faulkner, Forster, Lawrence, and Woolf

Erin K. Johns Speese

Contents

	Acknowledgements	viii
	Permissions	ix
1	Introduction	1
2	A novel feeling: aesthetics of emotion and the modern novel	20
3	Mater sacer: Addie as sublime object in William Faulkner's As I Lay Dying	44
4	Only disconnect: Ruth Wilcox, death, and the sublime object in Howards End	66
5	Transcending the rainbow: the possibility of sublime intersubjectivity in D.H. Lawrence's The Rainbow	87
6	"What is R?": Mrs. Ramsay as feminism's sublime object in Virginia Woolf's To the Lighthouse	118
	Epilogue: Žižek's mom: theory, feminism, and the mother	146
	Works cited	153
	Index	163