

Contents

List of illustrations	xiii
Author and contributor biographies	xv
PART I
Introduction	1
1 Modes of learning in post-secondary education	3
Scope of the book	3
Issues addressed	3
Adult education	4
Distance education	5
Open learning	6
Distance and open learning are not synonymous	7
Flexible learning	8
E-learning	8
Generalisation	9
Summary	9
2 Major themes in student learning	11
Research literature	11
Persistence project	11
Part-time project	12
Approaches to learning	15
Models of retention	17
Students' beliefs about teaching, learning and knowledge	19
Nature of teaching and approaches to learning	21
Summary	25

PART II

Open learning 27

3 The Open University of the United Kingdom – a British eccentricity or a model for the world? 29

ALAN WOODLEY

Introduction 29

An institution of its time 29

The growth of education in the UK 30

The growth of higher education in the UK 31

The education of adults 32

The conception of the Open University 35

From conception to reality 40

The Planning Committee 42

Reasons for success 48

The launch of the Open University 50

Early survival 52

The growth period 56

The future 57

Discussion 58

Postscript 60

4 Need for open entry in developing countries 61

Mass and elite higher education 61

Educational systems in developing countries 62

Open universities in developing countries 62

Open education in Hong Kong 64

Students enrolling in open universities 68

Cost of distance education 70

Summary 73

5 Other elements of openness 74

Open learning 74

Freedom of time 74

Freedom of place 76

Freedom of choice of courses 78

Summary 79

PART III
Adult learning	81
6 Pedagogy and andragogy	83
Adult learning	83
Andragogy and pedagogy	84
Andragogy as a set of continua	86
Self-determination in learning	86
Summary	89
7 Open universities expect andragogy	90
Adapting to distance education	90
Initial problems in adapting to study at a distance	90
Beliefs about teaching and learning	91
Beliefs about knowledge	93
Normative congruence	94
Compatibility between modes of teaching and learning	95
Goals of self-determination	97
Teaching incompatible with self-determining students	98
Didactic teaching to reproductive learners	98
Accepting the status quo?	100
Recognition of need for independent learners	101
Alternatives to didactic tutorials	102
Reorienting beliefs about teaching and learning	102
Summary	106
PART IV
Distance education	109
8 Appropriateness of the UKOU model for developing countries	111
Students graduating from open universities	111
Interpretation of graduation rates	113
Demand for graduates	114
Demand for graduates in Hong Kong	115
Outsourcing	117
Summary	119

9 Dual-mode universities	120
New England model	120
Flexibility of the dual-mode system	121
Summary	122
10 North American model of distance education	124
Five generations of distance education	124
Communication technologies	127
Research into the effect of media	128
Conclusion	130
11 The loneliness of the distance learner	131
Benefits of group learning	131
Integration and persistence	134
The place of human contact in distance education	135
Do distance learners want contact?	137
Collective affiliation	140
Belonging to class group	142
Tutor–student interaction	145
Sense of belonging to university	147
Freedom of course choice	148
Individualism and collectivism	150
Achievement motivation in Confucian-heritage societies	151
Conclusion	152

PART V

Flexible and e-learning	155
12 E-learning	157
CARMEL MCNAUGHT
Focus of the chapter	157
Models for distance education programmes and providers	158
A focus on technology and learning designs	162
Bridging the bandwidth divide with wireless systems	164
Summary	165
13 Flexible learning: but how flexible?	167
Flexible learning	167

Open universities lack parents of flexible learning	168
Industrial systems	169
Examples of flexible learning	170
University of the South Pacific	170
University of Papua New Guinea	172
Hong Kong – student guidance	173
Deakin – Hong Kong – education	174
China	175
An OUHK tutor	177
Conclusion	179

14 Conclusion181

Difficulty of adapting to distance education	182
Easing the transition	183
Towards flexible learning?	183
Blending in more face-to-face contact	184
Adapting existing structures	184
Evaluation and research	185
Helping students adapt to study at a distance	185

References

187

Index

199