

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	viii
References	x
Preface to the 2004 Edition	xi
1 Introduction: The Peculiar Language of Literature	1
2 Nature, Art, and the Supplement in Renaissance Literary Theory: Puttenham's Poetics of Decorum	17
Nature and Art	17
The Supplement and the Pharmakon	22
The Decorous Art of English Poetry	24
The Politics of Nature	33
Tracing the Supplement	41
3 Romanticism and the Language of Nature: The Project of Wordsworth's Preface	46
Nature and Art: Neoclassic to Romantic	46
Wordsworth and the Real Language of Men	53
Prose versus Verse	65
The Principle of Selection: Imagination, Taste, and the Supplement	69
The Poetic Context: Audience, Society, Books	82
4 Language as History/History as Language: Saussure and the Romance of Etymology	90
Synchrony, Diachrony, and the Question of History	90
Etymology and the Nature of Authentic Meaning	98
Word-History and Word-Play	105
Folk Etymology and Feedback	111
History and Narrative	118

5	Literature as Imitation: Jakobson, Joyce, and the Art of Onomatopoeia	127
	Hermogenes or Cratylus?	127
	“Fff! Oo!”: Nonlexical Onomatopoeia	136
	“Liquor for His Lips”: Lexical Onomatopoeia	148
	The Art of Onomatopoeia	154
6	Literature as Deviation: Syntax, Style, and the Body in Ulysses	158
	Norms and Deviations	158
	Lipspeech	160
	With Apologies to Lindley Murray	172
	Language, Ideology, and the Body	184
7	Unpacking the Portmanteau; or, Who’s Afraid of Finnegans Wake ?	188
	The Pleasures of the Pun	188
	The Power of the Portmanteau	195
	Pariah and Paradigm	204
8	Deconstructing Digression: The Backbone of Finnegans Wake and the Margins of Culture	210
	Theme (from a Filleted Wake)	210
	Digression	218
	Return: The Wake as Backbone	231
	Works Cited	239
	Index	255