

Contents

Preface and Acknowledgements	x
Preface to the Paperback Edition	xiii
1. Theoretical Considerations	1
1.1 Introductory Note	1
1.2 Taxonomy Revisited	2
1.3 Etiological Comment	10
1.4 A Morphological Model	16
2. The Czech 'Hussite' Revolution	22
2.1 General Preconditions	22
2.2 Specific Preconditions and the Reform Programme	24
2.3 The Onset and Institutionalisation	27
2.4 Compression and Explosion	29
2.5 The Revolutionary Spectrum and its Social Context	30
Graph 1: The Pattern of the Czech Revolution	35
2.6 Oscillation	36
2.7 Interception, Tightening and Expansion	38
2.8 Restoration: Compromise and Pressure	42
2.9 Consolidation	44
Chronology to the Morphological Model (graph 1)	46
3. The English 'Puritan' Revolution	49
3.1 Nature of the Revolution	49
3.2 Causes and Onset	52
3.3 Compression, Institutionalisation and Explosion	56
3.4 Oscillation and the Revolutionary Spectrum	58
3.5 Interception, Tightening and Expansion	61
3.6 Reversal and Restoration Compromise	64
3.7 Restoration Pressure and the Consolidation
Overthrow	66
Graph 2: The Pattern of the English Revolution	67
Chronology to the Morphological Model (graph 2)	69

4.	The French 'Bourgeois' Revolution	72
4.1	Introductory Remarks on the Nature of the Revolution	72
4.2	The Class Issue	74
4.3	The Attack on the Church and Christianity	77
4.4	Multiple Dysfunction and the Main Fronts in the Revolution	79
	Graph 3: The Pattern of the French Revolution	82
4.5	From Onset to Oscillation	83
4.6	From Oscillation to Reversal	86
4.7	From Reversal to the First Consolidation	88
4.8	The Second Turn of the Revolution	90
	Chronology to the Morphological Model (graph 3)	93
5.	The Russian 'Bolshevik' Revolution	97
5.1	General Remarks	97
5.2	Historical Roots	99
5.3	The Need for Industrialisation	102
5.4	Multiple Dysfunction or Total Disintegration?	104
5.5	Western Paradigm and Russian Reality	110
5.6	The Revolutionary Spectrum and its Dynamics	114
	Graph 4: The Pattern of the Russian Revolution	117
5.7	The Morphological Pattern of the Revolutionary Process	119
5.8	Some Particular Features of the Russian Revolution	123
	Chronology to the Morphological Model (graph 4)	127
6.	The Turkish 'National' Revolution	131
6.1	The Nature of the Revolution	131
6.2	The Ethno-Religious Slant of the Social Structure	133
6.3	Etiological Considerations	136
6.4	The Morphology of Adaptation	140
6.5	The Morphology of Transformation	144
6.6	Some Specific Features of the Revolution	148
	Graph 5: The Pattern of the Turkish Revolution	149
	Chronology to the Morphological Model (graph 5)	153
7.	The Chinese 'Communist' Revolution	156
7.1	Introductory Note	156
7.2	A Prelude to Revolution: The Taiping Uprising	158
7.3	Reform or Revolution?	160
7.4	The First Round of Revolution: The Mandate of the People or Yet Another Mandate of Heaven?	162
7.5	The Second Round of Revolution: Euro-American or Euro-Asian Paradigm?	165

7.6	The Third Round of the Revolution: Reception or Reconstruction?	168
7.7	The Consolidation Period: What Sort of Reconstruction?	173
7.8	The Etiology and the Spectrum of the Chinese Revolution	175
	Graph 6: The Pattern of the Chinese Revolution	179
7.9	The Morphological Pattern of the Chinese Revolution	180
7.10	The International Setting and Civilisational Dimension of the Chinese Revolution	182
	Chronology to the Morphological Model (graph 6)	186
8.	Conclusions	191
8.1	Structure of Causation	192
8.2	Common and Diverse Features of Morphology	196
8.3	The Course and Impact of the West European Revolutions	201
8.4	The Course, Impact and Interplay of the Non- Western Revolutions	207
8.5	Theoretical Suggestions	212
	Notes, Including Quoted Bibliography	217
	Additional Select Bibliography	236
	Author Index	239
	Subject Index	241