

JOHN DOS
PASSOS &
Cinema

LISA NANNY

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction	1

Part I (1917–1928)

From the Stage to the Screen: “Goin’ to the Movies...” in the Great War and the 1920s

1	Experimental Drama and Soviet Constructivist Theater	11
2	The Birth of an Industry: Setting the Stage for the Screen	25
3	“Propaganda for peace”: Film and Narrative in One Man’s Initiation: 1917 (1920), Three Soldiers (1921), and D.W. Griffith’s Hearts of the World (1918)	37
4	Soviet Film: Montage, the Camera Eye, and Ideology	63

Part II (1934–1937)

From Paramount Studios to the Spanish Front: Writing Hollywood, Filming History

5	“The world’s greatest center of ... propaganda”: Hollywood, The Devil Is a Woman , and The Big Money	77
---	--	----

6	Film Writing: “Dreamfactory,” Metafilm, and the Politics of Form	101
7	Filming History and The Spanish Earth : “what a man and a comrade has to do in ... wartimes”	127

Part III (1937–1970)
From Page to Stage to Screens: Adapting U.S.A.
and “the truth as I see it”

8	Filmic Narrative into Narrative Film: “politics and the silver screen”	159
	Conclusion	183
	Appendix	195
	Notes	217
	Index	243